LIVERMORE. Town in Alameda County, California, some forty-miles southeast of San Francisco. The surrounding Livermore Valley has been recognized since the 1880's as one of the best table-wine districts of the United States; its rolling, gravelly soil seems particularly well adapted to the production of white wines, and such famous European varieties as the Sauvignon Blanc, Semillon, Pinot Blanc, and Chardonnay are widely planted, as are also the Gray Riesling and Ugni Blanc. The leading producers are Wente Bros., Concannon, and Cresta Blanca.

LOIRE, LA (La Lwahr). The longest and one of the most beautiful rivers of France, traversing, in the course of its 600-mile journey from its source, west of Lyon, to the Atlantic, near Nantes, a whole series of different provinces and viticultural areas. Its wines, sometimes collectively called Vins de la Loire, include a most diverse and interesting collection of reds, whites, and rosés, ranging all the way in quality from poor to great. Some of the more important ones are: Pouilly-Fumé, Sancerre, Quincy, Touraine, Vouvray, Bourgueil, Chinon, Saumur, Anjou, Muscadet, etc.

LOMBARDY. Important region of Northern Italy; its capital is Milan. Produces between 50 and 60 million gallons of table wine a year, the best of it from three widely separated districts: that of Valtellina, around Sondrio, east of Lake Como and not far from the Swiss border; secondly, a hilly area south of Pavia and the Po River, including Casteggio and the vineyards of Barbacarlo, etc.; finally, the western and southern shores of Lake Garda.

LUGANA (Loo-gahn-na). Very agreeable dry white wine produced round the tiny village of this name, at the southern end of Lake Garda, in Northern Italy. It is made from the Trebbiano grape, and is generally the best of the white Garda wines.

LYON (Lee-awn). Third city of France (pop. 470,000), situated at the junction of the Saône and Rhône Rivers, famous for the excellence of its food, and for the fondness which its citizens demonstrate daily for the wines of the Beaujolais district nearby. It has often been said (first said, it would appear, by Léon Daudet) that there are not two rivers in Lyon, but three: Rhône, Saône . . . the Beaujolais.

MACON (Mac-cawn). Important town (pop. 22,000) on the River Saône in southern Burgundy; a major center of the wine trade. As a wine, Macon may legally be red, rosé or white; if red or rosé, it must be made exclusively from Gamay, Pinot Noir or Pinot Gris grapes, or a blend of these; if white, from the Chardonnay (or Pinot Chardonnay) alone. The red—Macon or Macon Rouge—is a pleasant, sound, generally inexpensive wine, less fruity and attractive than good Beaujolais, though firmer, and often a bit short and hard. The rosé has these same faults, and little to redeem them; it is undistinguished. The white is of an entirely different class; thanks to its grape, the Pinot Chardonnay (quite possibly the best white wine variety in existence) and to recent progress in vinification methods, it has become about the best inexpensive dry white wine of France. What is especially outstanding comes from the villages of Viré, Clessé, Lugny and the commune of Chardonnay (where, according to local tradition, the grape of this name was first grown); the wine is sold under a confusing variety of different names and labels. The poorest is usually called simply Macon Blanc; the better qualities generally carry one of the four above-mentioned township names, as, for example, "Appellation Macon-Clessé Contrôlée," plus, more and more often, the name of the grape, Pinot Chardonnay.

Even more distinguished wines are also entitled to the appellation Macon Blanc, although they are hardly ever so sold. These include Pouilly-Fuissé, Pouilly-Vinzelles and Pouilly-Loché.

MADEIRA. Portuguese island, far out in the Atlantic, which has been famous for its wines for nearly four hundred years. Oddly enough, these wines first achieved what might be called international reputation and class because of the favor they enjoyed in America in Colonial days: clipper ships, following the westerly trade winds, made Madeira a regular port-of-call, taking on water and supplies plus a few casks of wine on their return voyage from Europe to Charleston or Philadelphia, Baltimore, New York, or Boston. The sea voyage reputedly improved the wine, and a good many 18th- and 19th-century Madeiras, bottled in this country, carried on their label the name of the vessel that had transported them and the year of the voyage.

It has often been stated, and quite possibly is true, that the British taste for Madeira dates from our War of Independence, when returning British officers spoke enthusiastically of the quality of bottles they had tasted in American cellars. In any case, a few decades later, the Madeira trade had followed the pattern set by Port, Sherry and Marsala and was largely in English hands.

Like almost all European wine lands, but more severely than most, Madeira was invaded and its vineyards devastated in the late 1800's by two plagues of New World origin—the oidium (a sort of mildew) and the phylloxera. The island's economy never entirely recovered, and it is safe to say that Madeiras of as high quality have never been made since. Nor is America today the principal market for Madeira: France (where it is used principally in cooking), Sweden, and Denmark each import three or four times our modest annual total of under 15,000 gallons.

All Madeiras, of course, are fortified wines, brought up to their strength of 18-20 percent by the addition of high-proof brandy. Although aged and blended in soleras, like Sherry (true vintage Madeira hardly exists, if indeed at all), they are made by a quite different process, much like that used for Marsala, and owe their characteristic flavor to the fact that they are kept at a high temperature, for a period of months, in special rooms called estufas.

Madeira, it should be kept in mind, is not just one wine but a whole company of wines, ranging from very dry to very sweet, from pale straw (Rainwater) to deep gold (Malmsey) in color, from cheap to very expensive, from mediocre to extraordinary in quality. As cooking wines, even the lesser grades are remarkable, and no Sherry or Marsala can replace them. As apéritif or dessert wines, those of exceptional class are quite properly high-priced, and are increasingly hard to find. The nomenclature has become more and more standardized, and most of the old, once-famous export houses have come together and tend, increasingly, to draw their wines from jointly held stocks. The old system of individual vineyard names has pretty much disappeared in Madeira and is not likely to return.

The finest Madeiras, with a few exceptions, take their name from the grape from which they are made. The driest, called Sercial, is somewhat comparable to a Fino Sherry, but with an altogether special and often extraordinary bouquet and character. One called Verdelho could be described as its cousin, but is now rarely available. Boal, or Bual, is a good deal sweeter and more golden, almost a dessert wine by modern standards, although our grandfathers drank it with terrapin and shad. Malmsey—deep gold, very sweet—can be entirely remarkable, and it seems too bad that wines such as this, however magnificent, are a little out of fashion.

Rainwater Madeira, the palest of all, was, it seems, created by an American wine-lover called "Rainwater Habisham," who developed a special system of fining and clarifying to render his family wine the lightest and the most like rain water of all. It has become a name of general and unrestricted usage.

● London is not a place to whip through in a few days, yet the truth is that if we stay much longer we never want to leave it. We find it one of the most frustrating if fascinating cities in the world, arriving with a list of things to do as long as the Queen Mary, and invariably leaving with the unnerving feeling that we have left undone most of the things we ought to have done. And if there is any health in us, it is because we have whiled away whole delicious afternoons sailing down the Thames, or mooning over the crown jewels, which we have seen often enough to be able to reset. Or we haven't had half enough theater because we dined too long and lavishly at Mirabelle's or got carried away by the Valpolicella at Tiberio's.

Things pile up on you in London. You think you have your "shedool" running like clockwork, when someone tells you all London is talking about the latest exhibition at the Marlboro Gallery, or about the incomprehensible metaphysical discussion of American poetry on the BBC, so there you are looking at paintings or listening to radio at the time you intended to be at 50 Wimpole Street or Madame Tussaud's, or getting your tea-shopping done at Fortnum and Mason.

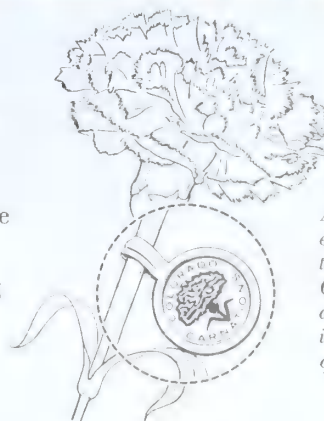

Londoners themselves say that they can't catch up with all that goes on, never mind the time-honored sights to be seen. So a mere visitor does just (Please turn to page 238)

House Beautiful

OCTOBER • 1963

A question of values

• Many houses being built today are more costly and more impressive than the three you will see on the following 25 pages. Yet many of the costly and impressive houses would never be classed as “great.” But we have no hesitation in applying the term to these three.

It comes down to a question of values. We feel these houses represent a high degree of mature judgment on the part of their owners and designers. Their qualities reflect the attitude of people who have rejected the superficial values of life—either by instinct or experience—for those of greater significance and depth.

Study these three houses. They are quite different from each other. Yet they have many basic attitudes in common, as you will see in our summary on page 201.

A house that turns existing into living

Wherever man has lived he has found that his surroundings affect every moment of his life

● To some people, a house is simply a place where the practical necessities of eating and sleeping are conveniently brought together. To others, a house is a vehicle for impressing friends and neighbors. To a few, a house is an opportunity to create a setting that will actually change the character of their lives.

One of these few, Mrs. Harold Snow, built the house you see on these pages. It was designed for her by Architect Euine Fay Jones. For Mrs. Snow, who had been used to conventional houses throughout her life, this new house has been a revelation of the part that architecture can play in outlook, in mood, in depth of enjoyment.

Her waking moments are filled with beauty. Once each morning, a shaft of sunlight pierces the clerestory window where the chimney meets the roof. For a few dramatic minutes it slants across the chimney, emphasizing the ruggedness of the stonework. In the afternoon, the drama is repeated through the clerestory on the other side. During the day, if Mrs. Snow looks up as she works at the sink, her glance comes to rest on the Arkansas hills 30 miles away. If the day is gloomy, she can turn her back on it and warm at the hearth in the secure center of the house. Each evening, in the setting sun, the pebbled glass of the entry tingles with prismatic stars of color.

These are big events in the house, but more important are little events: the delicate ending on a massive beam, the proper proportion of stone to stone, the cabinet pull that (More photographs overleaf. Text continues on page 180)

A broad, simple roof, reflecting the conformation of the surrounding hills and extended to cover the carport and entrance steps, is the chief feature of the unassuming exterior. Note that although the house is essentially closed on entry side and faced away from the street for privacy, the possibility of seeing through the gable makes it seem open and inviting.

ALL PHOTOGRAPHS OF THIS HOUSE BY ELBA STOLLER & BRONKHORST

Built on a hillside, the house is, in effect, two stories high on the downhill side. On the upper level, the main area is continued outside as a balcony projected to present the view. On the lower level is a separate apartment reached by stairs down hillside at left.

This house is open to the world, yet intimate in its scale. It is not a large house (only 1,700 sq. ft.), but it seems spacious because of its openness. Except for the bedroom, this floor is all one area. The view is important. Note how the roof beams lead the eye to it. But it is the fireplace that is the climactic center of the house. Raising the roof around it and creating clerestory windows on either side of it emphasize its drama and permit the sun to spotlight it.

Light from the clerestory window, where the chimney meets the roof, slants down across the stonework, emphasizing its rugged quality. Kitchen is a continuous part of the living space, but well screened from it. At work here, Mrs. Snow is not isolated but conveniently near the center of things. As she works, below, she looks through the house to distant hills.

feels as good as it looks. All these and many more are reminders for her that beauty is an everyday affair.

Mrs. Snow is a widow. She told Architect Jones she wanted a "house that looked as natural as if it had been growing on the side of the mountain." She was planning to live alone, but she wanted the house to give her a strong sense of security and shelter.

How the architect achieved this feeling without closing the house up like a box can be seen in the photographs and studied in the plan. There are blank walls on the north and south sides, where the only view would be of neighboring houses (and where the windows would of necessity be at ground level). On the west, the street side, there is a large window, but it does not open, and it is glazed with obscure glass to well above eye level. It is only on the east side that the house opens wide. Here, because of the sharply sloping site, the windows are safely fourteen feet above ground level.

The house is approached by one of two front doors at each side of the car shelter. There is a door near, no matter on which side you have parked your car (there is off-street space for eight cars). The entrance is generous for so small a house, but it is visually, and actually, a part of the living room (see top left photograph on page 178).

Looking from the dining area through the kitchen, one has a view, through a slot between a wall and a pier, into the entry area. Intriguing glimpses such as this contribute to the spatial richness of the interior of the house. Laundry equipment is in a closet beyond the refrigerator, near the desk at left.

LOWER LEVEL

The main living part of the house is a large central area bounded on two sides by private spaces. In it, thirty-five friends can be entertained at lunch, and yet it is so intimate in character that one person, alone, does not feel lost in it. The separate studio apartment that is on the lower level is shown in plan above.

The swimming pool and the terrace surrounding it are an integrally planned part of the house, an outdoor room without a roof. From here one can take in the full sweep of the view while basking in the sun, protected from the offshore winds which blow from the direction in which camera was pointing.

This view of the ocean from a spot near the master bedroom gives some idea of the vastness of the scene. The shallow end of pool is near the lounging area at end of living room. Broad steps lead up to the outdoor dining area, sheltered in angle of the house. Paving is exposed aggregate concrete.

restraint in the vastness of nature

In a house on the Southern California coast, the immensity of space and vastness of the view are handled as things rare and precious

● When faced with an overabundance of anything, there is always a great temptation—unless experience has warned us otherwise—to overindulge. By this means many a delight has been spoiled, even in architecture.

Faced with an overwhelming view of the Pacific Ocean, many an architect, needing only the slightest encouragement from his client, would be strongly tempted to try to take it all in at once. And if he built with the intention of exposing the view to the client, he might discover, to his regret, that he unmercifully exposed his client to the view.

Although the vastness of nature's forces can be a continuing source of nourishment for the spirit, it can also, if not tempered, be overpowering. Few can take it neat and in large quantities. Like any true delight, it is best when savored.

This house, designed by Architect Aaron Green, makes it possible for its owners, Mr. and Mrs. Judge F. Anderson, to do just that—to savor the scene as they choose. It provides them with a full gamut of (Please turn the page) spaces and views and with a full range of experiences of the setting: from the complete openness of the terrace to the sequestered spaciousness of its deeply withdrawn interior: from the full sweep of the view to intriguing glimpses of smaller portions of it.

On clear, moonlit nights when the stars take on a special radiance, they may sit out under the sky and absorb the wonder of it. But on gray and drizzly evenings, they may sit inside, within the embracing enclosure of the living room and near the security and comforting warmth of the fireplace. On crisp and bright mornings when the air seems to sparkle, they may have breakfast on the terrace and bask in the sun. But at midday, if the sky and sea are mercilessly monotonous and overbearing, as they can be at times, they may retreat to the sheltering shade of the interior and still be, in effect, out-of-doors.

True, there is a roof overhead, and there are walls and mullions supporting it. But these do not seem so much to shut in and contain the space as to shelter it, give it definition, and suggest its use. The floor you see underfoot is a continuation of the exposed aggregate concrete pavement that is outside. The walls and ceiling are the same as those outside. The same ceiling (turn the page)

The inner quality of this house, in contrast with those that are designed from an exterior point of view, is particularly evident in these photos of the living area. The unassuming exterior does not lead you to expect such spatial richness. All of it was achieved with the most modest of materials.

The plan, although it may appear complicated, is essentially a simple L. Bedrooms are in one leg of the L; the living and dining areas and kitchen are in the other. Because of boundary limitations of site, the L has been bent into a 45-degree angle. The upper left-hand corner of the house points into the offshore winds of the area so that the L, wrapped around the dining terrace and partially around pool to shelter these areas, makes them habitable on windy days.

continues overhead. And, due to the way the glass has been set in many openings, there are not the usual lines of demarcation, particularly at the ceiling, which make you aware of the line between the interior and the exterior.

This absence of demarcation stems in large part from the fact that the inside and outside have been conceived and planned as one continuous area. The outdoor terrace and pool are as much a part of the house as is the kitchen or the living room. The planning of this feature so that it could be used a good portion of the year was a determining factor in the over-all form of the house.

Although it is possible to live outdoors in Southern California a good part of the year, in the particular spot in which this house is located, offshore winds would make an outdoor area unusable unless it was protected from these winds. The house was designed to provide this protection for the terrace and pool.

The site of the house, with its magnificent view of the ocean, has somewhat irregular boundaries. There are steep cliffs on the south and east sides. On the south, the cliff drops to an intermediate plateau on which there are houses, and then on to the ocean. On the east there is an arroyo and a road leading down through it to the plateau. At the north and west, the ground rises, but not so steeply.

In plan the house forms a simple L wrapped around two sides of the terrace. The L, however, has been bent into a 45-degree angle because of limitations imposed by the irregular boundaries, the cliffs, and the (Please turn the page)

The main entrance (above) has a quality of depth. It seems to penetrate into the interior space and invite you to come in. Although the door is 12 feet from edge of roof, the skylight in roof prevents area from being dark. Photograph at the right looks back at the entrance from the central hall.

The master bedroom gives the same sense of being in the open—yet sheltered and protected—that the entire house does. This is due to the way in which the space has been enclosed by the elements of construction that define it. The folded plane of the ceiling seems to rest lightly on the vertical mullions, the screenlike wood wall that surrounds the head of the bed, and the stone of the fireplace. Note that since you see no joint where the glass meets the ceiling, you are not aware of any sharp division between inside and out.

A fireplace in the master bedroom gives an elemental sense of luxury to the room. Man today does not know the pleasant sensation of dressing by an open fire. The opening separating stone and wood walls gives a visual tie to outside.

Master bathroom reveals a fresh look at our living habits. Joined with dressing area, it is a continuous, but separate, part of master bedroom. Glass doors at right open to shower and water closet. Another shower is outside in the garden.

wind. The angle of the L is pointed into the wind. The bedrooms are in one leg of the L, the living areas in the other. You enter near the bend in the L. From the entry there is immediate access to both the living and bedroom areas.

The entrance side of the house, shown in the photograph on page 187, is quite unassuming. You see only the entrance area, accented by the projecting flat roof covering the garage and entrance. The area is defined by concrete retaining walls at one side and by a redwood fence (it surrounds the private garden adjacent to the bedrooms) on the other. Near the center of this area, and at one side of the garage, is the deeply recessed entrance door. The recessed space of the entrance seemingly penetrates into the interior. It is a space that invites entering.

Within the entrance, you find yourself in a seemingly continuous, yet sequestered, space. From the entry area there is, on the left, a view through the bedroom wing and out of the gable end of the master bedroom. There is also a view of the terrace and pool area. Directly ahead of you is the dining area with intimations of the living room beyond it. See photo on page 183. (Please turn the page)

From the master bedroom you have a spectacular view across the pool to the Pacific (this photograph was taken from the roof above the bedroom). The pool terrace has steep cliffs on its east and south sides. Although there are houses on the plateau part way down on the south side, they are not in sight.

What appears to be a paneled wall and a vertical interruption in the long counter extending from the dining area into the kitchen (see photo at right below) opens to reveal pots and pans and other cooking equipment, and shelves for canned goods and supplies. Recessed opening in corner, offering a new view, is a visual link to outside.

The kitchen's trimness results from the careful incorporation of its equipment. A cooking-top is built into tile-topped counter near sink. Beyond the oven and stacked refrigerator and freezer units, a walled panel covers stacked laundry units.

The kitchen, although the word does not seem appropriate to this area, where little evidence of kitchen can be seen, is a continuation of dining area. The long counter at left serves as a buffet or sideboard and provides generous storage space.

A person moving about within the house has many kinds of views of the exterior—the terrace, the garden, the sea, the sky. All of them are visual ties to the exterior and help to maintain the continuity of inside and out. But they vary, due to the manner in which they have been framed between elements of the construction. Some are seen through slot-like openings, such as the one between the fireplace and the wood wall at the head of the beds in the master bedroom. Others are seen through recessed openings, such as those over the counter in the kitchen. The major views, of course, are those from the master bedroom and the living room.

Here, with the vertical mullions of the windows silhouetted against the view, the effect is similar to that of seeing a portion of the landscape from (Please turn to page 241)

A person working in the kitchen has a pleasing view of almost all areas of the house. From here, looking across the dining area, there is a view of the ocean framed in the gable end of living room. As can be seen in plan, you also have a view of terrace and pool, entrance area, and bedroom hall.

You approach the entrance door along covered walkway leading through a private, cloistered space. At one side is a paved, wind-protected lounging area.

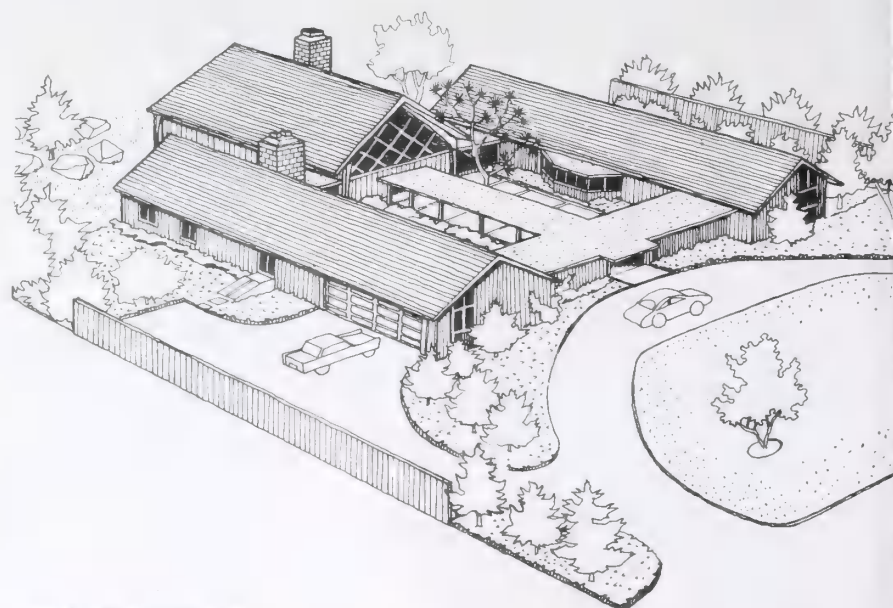

Having crossed the entrance court, you pass through doorway (shown open) into this entry hall. All three wings of house are easily reached from here.

An imaginative house that faces the facts of life

■ In architecture, a freedom from pretense is one of the most difficult things to achieve—how to be imaginative, yet not indulge in make-believe; how to create a setting for real life, yet one that goes beyond simple reality.

This house encloses space with a style and an imagination that lifts it well above the routine and mundane. It is, in many ways, a luxurious house. Yet, as you will discover, it is eminently practical. In fact, most of its apparent luxury stems from practical requirements. (Please turn the page)

The three units that create the enclosed courts and give the house its unusual form are the result of realistic privacy needs. The dramatic gable-end lighting solves the problem of directional light from the water. In short, the beauty of the house is rooted in the solution of specific needs.

Like the others in this issue, this house has a carefully planned entrance sequence that emphasizes the privacy of the family's life and also prepares you for the magnificent view of Long Island Sound that is ultimately revealed. You pass first through an opening in a wall facing the street, and approach the main entrance along a covered walk that crosses a cloistered court. On one side of the walk is a handsomely planted evergreen garden. On the other is a paved sitting area. Having crossed the court, you enter the lofty space of the main living area, but you don't see all of it immediately. A storage unit separating the entry from the dining area conceals it from view. It is only when you walk around this unit and into the side of the dining area that you experience the full impact of the room and the view, framed in the handsome structure of the gable.

The house is divided into three distinctly separate units. All of these can be reached from the main entry area. At the left, as you approach the entrance, is the unit containing the master suite and the garage. At the right is the unit in which the children's rooms, the kitchen, and the maid's room are located. In the center is the higher unit containing the main living area.

In plan, the house consists of three essentially separate divisions: one at the left containing the garage and master suite; one in the center containing the main living areas; and one at the right in which the children's bedrooms, the kitchen, and the maid's room are located. These separate units are connected by two flat-roofed, glassed-in areas. One is used as a breakfast room and one as a game room and study. The three units create an entry court further shielded from public view by a louvered wall at the front. There's a small garden here, a terrace, and covered walks to the entry doors.

The master bedroom has the same view of the water through its open gable end as does the living room. Note again how the view is framed and also how this room, by an appropriate variation in character, recognizes a variation in function. Yet it remains true to the over-all character of the house.

Both dining area and breakfast room open onto this generous terrace. Texture of exposed aggregate prevents glare, and a large tree dapples it with shade. Protected on two sides from wind, terrace has same magnificent view of Long Island Sound as living room.

In the child's room near the entrance drive, the architect took advantage of the sloping ceiling to gain a tall window that makes the room less bedroom-like. Over the counter combining desk and storage facilities, windows look into the bedroom garden, planned to give privacy to this side of house.

In the children's wing, the hall is widened at its midpoint into a bay projecting into the court. This play area can be supervised by the mother or maid working in the kitchen (seen through doorway at end of hall). Children playing here can see—and be seen from—many places within the house.

the other. They are linked only by glass-enclosed connections similar in construction to the covered walkway.

As can be seen in the photos, these seemingly open links give the terrace and garden areas within the courtyard the appearance of being continuous with those outside and produce an interlocking of indoor and outdoor spaces. From certain places within the house you can look through an outdoor area into another part of the house. This interweaving of indoor and outdoor spaces is a way of establishing an integral relationship between the two. The other houses in this issue also have this relationship. Each has been achieved in a different manner, but on all three sites the houses and their environment have been conceived and treated as units, not as separate and unrelated things.

The division of this house plan into three parts was a natural outgrowth of the pattern of living established by the family and interpreted by the architect. They wanted a (More photographs on next page. Text continues on page 230)

The kitchen, designed by Evelyn Chapin as consultant, also has a view of the water through its tall window. # Three great new houses— what they have that you should aim for

The three houses you've seen on the preceding 25 pages were designed by three different architects for sites in three different parts of the country. Superficially they bear little resemblance to each other. Yet each in its own way illustrates certain basic characteristics that you will find in the best contemporary architecture. A list of these characteristics therefore forms a thoughtful starting point for anyone judging houses for today's living

1. The houses are inner in character, not exterior. They were planned from the inside. The emphasis in the design process was upon securing livable interior space and not an imposing and impressive exterior or façade. As a result the houses have unassuming exteriors.
2. They were planned in relation to a specific site. They were all designed with a concern for the best over-all use of the site, including its natural features, climate, and outlook.
3. They each have a skillfully planned entrance. One does not enter into them abruptly, but by way of a transitional and preparational series of "events" which lead or introduce one into the interior. The entrance court of the house on page 192 is the most elaborate of these events.
4. They each provide privacy from the street and neighbors. The main living areas do not face toward the street, but are turned away from it. In addition, in each of them some device for securing privacy—either of planning or construction—has been used to give further privacy to the occupants of the house. For example: the use of the cliffs to give privacy to the outdoor area of house on page 182; the use of the slope of the site to give privacy to balcony and open end of living area of house on page 176; the use of walls or fences to screen garden areas.
5. The natural landscape has been made an integral element of the interior space. Whether it is a broad, distant view of the sea or mountains or a close-up, intimate view of some garden detail, this view has been carefully framed in the design of the house so that it has become a part of the interior space of the house itself. This capturing of a bit of the changing natural scene gives a quality of change and vitality to the interior and is an ever fresh source of pleasure.
6. There is no strong sense of separateness of indoor and outdoor spaces. Either by continuity, by extension, or by interweaving, these spaces have been made to seem one, in terms of both how they are used and how they are seen.
7. There is a continuity of spaces. This includes not only the relation between indoor and outdoor spaces, as mentioned in 6, but also the relation between indoor spaces. The interior rooms have not been conceived as separate and unrelated spaces.
8. Each house includes a variety in kinds of spaces. Use is made of spatial contrast. High and soaring space is effectively contrasted with lower, more intimate space.
9. The openings are not just holes in the side of a box. The doors and windows are treated as the spaces between elements of construction. For example, a window may be an opening separating a pier and a wall—or two sections of wall—that is continuous from the floor to the ceiling. This treatment implements the continuity of spaces.
10. The interior spaces are shaped and modeled directly by the elements of construction. The spaces derive from the walls, piers, beams, floors, and planes of ceilings (which are also the underside of the roof planes) that enclose the spaces. There are few extraneous elements used in the shaping of the space.
11. The materials of construction are used directly. The finished character of a surface, or space, is dependent upon the texture and grain of the materials being used and not upon an applied secondary treatment or finish.
12. The palette of materials used is limited in number. Each house is built of not more than two or three carefully selected materials.
13. Each house has a oneness of character. This is achieved by the limited palette of materials (mentioned in 12) consistently used. The details of construction are the same in all areas of the house, both inside and out.
14. The over-all form of each house is essentially simple. Although the final effect may be one of richness and complexity, the building itself is composed of a few simple elements. The Snow house on page 176 is essentially one gable roof. The Anderson house on page 182 is one continuous gable roof, bent into an acute angle. The Cullman house on page 192 is three parallel gable roofs joined by connecting links.

Listen to The Sound of the Harp

You'll hear
of music

By LEE WILCOX

● No wonder the harp has heavenly connotations. No wonder it has been called "the guitar of the gods." In the cool, pure music plucked from its strings, the loveliest sounds of the universe find their echoes. Large, mellow, grandiose, it can resound with the grandeur of winds booming through ocean caves. It can mimic the gentle sighing of breeze-brushed grasses in a summer meadow. It can re-create the silvery fall of a cascading fountain, the gurgle and chatter of a brook, the quiet lapping of lake water. Or its tones can splash like raindrops made audible as showering diamonds. All of its sounds seem to wait to be heard. They lie upon the air; they do not penetrate it.

It is an instrument of elegance. Its very physical form, like its aerial melodies, comes through as the embodiment of grace. It stands alone magnificently, five to six feet tall, with a crown resting majestically on its classic column. As an almost architectural ornament to any room, it is always within human scale, whether you focus upon its pure form or see it tilted and resting against the shoulder of the harpist. Observe it, listen to it, and you will become aware that its curvaceous shape somehow makes visual the musical scale. Look closely, for instance, at what is called the harmonic curve (the top short side of the harp's triangular structure) and its strings, waiting to be plucked, and you will see, even before you hear, the soul of music.

We of the 20th Century tend to think of the harp as a Victorian instrument for candlelight and camellias, played by ethereal ladies, regally postured, whose long, exquisitely tapered hands brush the strings with languor, whose delicate ankles are revealed under trailing chiffon skirts. We are completely wrong.

Traditionally, some of the very greatest harpists have been men, and while it is frequently the instrument of lovely ladies, you should know that the fingernails of these supple hands have been trimmed down close to the flesh, the finger tips unromantically toughened with callus in order to pluck out furious sound from strings of catgut, nylon, and steel wire. And if he, or she, plays with any expertise at all, the harpist will be no dilettante, but one who has spent years mastering the disciplined techniques of plucking these strings and toeing the twenty-one positions of the seven foot-pedals. The performance of a good harpist represents as practiced a technique as a performance on the pianoforte or violin.

Although the music of any instrument has more intimate meaning for those who themselves know how to play, harp music has a quality that can delight the neophyte as well as the musician. If you are still unacquainted with the personality of the harp, we urge you not necessarily to learn to play, but at least to open your ears to it—to go out of your way to listen to the harp, for through it you can enjoy sound as you have never heard it before.

A rich and interesting selection of recorded harp music is waiting for you to discover and enjoy. Do you remember Harpo, the silent Marx brother, who did such amazing things on the harp? Two of his records are still available, made by Mercury. The playing of this self-taught artist will overwhelm you with its virtuosity and ebullience. He is a truly remarkable performer in that he does not read music, but plays by ear. (His teacher, Mildred Dilling, to whom he turned in the 1940's for added polish, gives him an occasional lesson by long-distance telephone.)

We also recommend the recording by Marcel Grandjany of Ravel's "Introduction and Allegro" (Capitol), and the Melos Ensemble recording of four 20th-century French works (Oiseau). Try these four records as an introduction to an enjoyable understanding of the harp. We guarantee they'll whet your musical appetite for more, and so we append to this article a list of harp recordings worthy of your ear.

Recorded music for the solo harp is rare. More often you will find sonatas, concertos and small ensembles featuring the harp. It blends well with flute and violin and, of course, is included in every modern symphony orchestra. Wagner went so far as to write independent parts for six harps to be played together in the finale of "Das Rheingold." Berlioz included a lovely trio for two flutes and harp in his "L'Enfance du Christ." The (Please turn to page 243)

The huge new world of seafood cookery

If you eat seafood just on Fridays, and then only reluctantly, you need to discover the more delicate methods of the Japanese

By EIKO YUASA

● People who don't eat much seafood say they don't like the fishy taste and smell. The first people to understand this viewpoint would be the Japanese. Yet seafood is almost the most important item in the Japanese diet.

Their secret is that they have developed methods for handling and cooking seafoods so that there is no fishy smell or taste. These methods bear almost no resemblance to those of the Western cuisine. And their ways are so numerous and diverse that they would fill a huge cookbook if gathered together.

The biggest difference is that the Japanese use no butter (indeed, no dairy products at all) in seafood cookery. It is only my guess, but it could be that the opposing types of fats in butter and seafood (saturated versus unsaturated) set up some alien, unsympathetic reaction to each other that brings out the undesirable smells and tastes.

Another reason could be that Western methods call for overcooking—as much as 20 percent to 50 percent longer than Japanese ways. This hardens textures, reduces the inherent flavor, and points up bad ones. Long cooking also reduces the food values. Another factor that eliminates the undesirable taste and smell is the Japanese use of garnishings—particularly ginger and grated white radish.

Here is a roster of the most prevalent Japanese methods of presenting seafoods. Run your eye down the list to see how different they are from Western ways.

- Steam in sake, together with companion foods to make the whole meal (sake-mushi)
- Steam, with a sprinkling of salt (shio-mushi)
- Bake on a thick bed of salt, together with other foods to make a whole meal (horaku-yaki)
- Broil, after resting 20 minutes with a sprinkling of salt (shio-yaki)
- Broil after resting in a rich sauce that creates a glaze (teri-yaki)
- Sauté briefly in vegetable or nut oil, then finish in seasoned dashi (a soup stock made of dried kelp and dried bonito) (chikuzen-ni)
- Blanch briefly in hot water and dress with vinegar sauce (recipes for 1333 vinegar sauces on page 248) (yubiki)

- Marinate in vinegar (which produces a cookinglike process—the same effect achieved in seviche and escabeche, which use citrus juice for the same end) (sujime)
- Cook in seasoned liquids. Many variations of this produce startlingly different results (ni-mono)
- Cook in miso by either broiling, baking, or boiling (miso-ni)
- Fry (first and briefly), then finish in liquid (jibu-ni)

The easiest Japanese dish for you to start on is salt-broiled fish. The result is so spectacularly better than any other fish-cooking method that you will be amazed. Even your favorite fish will taste better than it ever has.

The only requirement is that you must have skin on the fish. Ideal, then, are small fish, like trout, which permit one to a person. The skin is necessary, for a surprising amount of fat exists under the skin, and this is what keeps the fish from burning without the protection of either butter or sauce.

About 20-30 minutes before cooking, salt the fish on both sides: use about the amount you would if you were salting after cooking. Let stand until time to cook. Then broil it at 500° on lightly-oiled aluminum foil, with the skin side facing the fire (8"-10" from the fire) for about 2/3 of the necessary time. Then turn with a spatula and finish with the flesh side up. In this last stage you must watch the fish carefully, to avoid burning it.

If you are using a whole fish with skin on both sides, you may cook both sides for an equal time.

The total time required for broiling differs according to the size and the thickness of the fish, but it is usually from 7 to 15 minutes, depending on size.

The result is moister and more flavorful. Fish that you considered dry, like salmon, is moister and has a much more interesting texture. People tasting their favorite fish cooked this way look at each other in pleased disbelief.

Why? Apparently the salt creates moisture, just as strawberries sitting in sugar develop juice. And the fat under the skin lubricates and prevents burning. It also tends to run down between the sections or flakes of the flesh and mix with the moisture created by (Please turn to page 247)

A broiled whole fish becomes more dramatic when presented as if it is swimming upstream. This is achieved by skewering it carefully before cooking (see instructions on page 249). Use a small fish like trout or a smelt. Generous salting of tail and fins will prevent burning.

In search of Cognac

What do you have to know about the greatest of all brandies to savor all the history and geography locked in each drop?

By GUY HENLE

● The next time someone offers you cognac, stop for a moment to consider the rich, amber-colored liquid in the glass. Cognac is brandy, a spirit distilled from grape wine. But not all brandy is cognac, and therein lies the difference. Cognac has its own characteristic aroma, its distinctive taste, its subtle overtones. On this it is easy to agree. But what makes the difference? If you know, you'll savor each sip a little longer, and you'll reach a little deeper for each flavor nuance. How do you find out?

The trail begins in the cobblestoned village of Cognac, in the mid-southwest of France. Situated on the banks of the Charente River, its tiny, winding streets are lined with centuries-old stone houses. Dotted around the town are the famous cognac establishments—the warehouses, the blending plants, the distilleries, the offices.

In the surrounding countryside lie the vineyards, some 138,000 acres of them. Row on row of lush green vines (grafted, it turns out, onto sturdy American root stock) hang heavy with fruit in late September. Here is where it all begins, the long and often complicated journey from grape to cognac.

Much of the quality of the final cognac is determined right here in the vineyard. The land rolls in gentle slopes, a bit like rural Pennsylvania, and nearly all of it within the legal limits of the cognac district (about one-fourth the size of Rhode Island) is given over to the raising of grapes. But the soil varies from section to section, producing such pronounced differences in the resulting grape (therefore in the wine, therefore in the cognac) that these differences are recognized in the seven official crus, or growths. They are, in order of quality: Grande Champagne, Petite Champagne, Borderies, Fins Bois, Bons Bois, Bois Ordinaires, and Bois Communs. When a cognac is labeled "Fine Champagne," it must be made from grapes grown in either the Grande Champagne or Petite Champagne districts. "Grande Fine Champagne" is made from grapes made from grapes originating only in the Grande Champagne district.

Thus, even before a grape is grown, you can know something of the quality of the cognac to come. In the amount of lime in the soil or the advantageous position of a vineyard with relation to the brilliant yet soft southern sun lie some of the answers to the riddle of cognac. This is geography at work.

Once the grape has grown, man takes a stronger hand in the workings of nature. He has found a way, over the centuries, of turning the fruit into a spirit of unique taste without the addition of any alcohols or flavorings. He makes the grape and its juice do the work themselves.

The grapes that he starts with—the Folle Blanche, the St. Emilion, the Colombar—are not unusual or particularly distinguished. They serve in other places for other wines. Here in the Cognac region they produce a wine that at its best is called by experts undrinkable. It is harsh and bitter, perhaps reflecting the chalky quality of the soil which produced the grapes.

Before it becomes this undrinkable wine, of course, it is simple grape juice pressed from the ripe fruit taken in the fall harvest. It is worth reflecting on this grape juice for a moment, since it is this same liquid that will eventually be celebrated as the finest of all brandies. The juice of a fresh grape is a white-green liquid with a refreshing taste, a revelation to anyone used to the purple product sold as grape juice in this country. It can be sweet or tart, depending on the sugar content of the grape.

This freshly pressed juice, though it will be put through a variety of processes and what seem like endless blendings, nevertheless has within it all the requirements of a cognac. The first process is the natural fermentation of the juice into the already mentioned bitter wine. This is done in large casks and lasts only five to fifteen days. The alcoholic content of the resulting wine is (Continued on page 244)

A WAY-OUT-AHEAD KITCHEN

Combining the latest in kitchen equipment with new developments in furnishings and finishes to surround it makes this room the last word in convenience and easy care

By NANCY CRAIG
House Beautiful's Equipment Editor

● This is my own kitchen. The key to the real wonder of it is the battery of control panels around the room. These are time- and labor-savers, the mechanical servants that are at my beck and call. With the flip of a switch, the push of a button, the turn of a dial, I can call on an extra pair of hands to take over an important job in preparing food, cooking it, serving it, or cleaning up afterwards. Drudgery is eliminated. My work is not only easy but fun in such well-equipped, undemanding surroundings.

This miracle of efficiency bears no resemblance to the kitchen I moved into, except in size. It was hopelessly old-fashioned and ugly, as the photograph on page 211 shows. A 40" wall cabinet over the sink and a 3' by 5' table supplied its only storage and work counter. Three doors opened into the room, so it was badly cut up. It had one good feature common to old houses, a 9½' ceiling, and its size (13' 3" by 10' 9") was enough for a good working kitchen. In addition, there was a large pantry adjacent for bulk storage.

To make the most of the space available, I closed off the door that opened onto a side entry. This gave continuous space along three walls for a shallow U-shape kitchen, with the fourth wall adding over 13' of storage and work counter.

We managed to keep structural changes to a minimum. The door leading to the (Please turn the page) pantry had to be moved a few inches, to get the depth needed for cabinets. Neither this nor enlarging the window opening was difficult in a frame house. Into the new opening went three 5' 2" casements of ponderosa pine to replace two small double-hung windows. Lighting and ventilation are much better, and this gives me a pleasant view of the garden and the outdoors. With windows open, I can even share some of the guests' conversation as I'm busy in the kitchen, when we are entertaining out-of-doors. In the interest of saving steps between kitchen and dining room, a pass-through (above) was cut into the wall separating these rooms. This gave me a serving counter within a few steps of the range on one side and the dining table on the other.

There were two points of major importance in choosing equipment for this kitchen: 1. Everything had to be as automatic as possible. 2. The finishes had to be easy to clean and keep.

Mine is a washable kitchen. Everything in it wipes or washes clean with a minimum of work. Even the wood cabinets, which give the appearance of an oiled, hand-rubbed finish, have a synthetic matte finish that is chemically cured with heat. It has a tough, mar-resistant film that wipes clean.

The same wipe-clean wood paneling covers the doors of the gourmet refrigerator-freezer. (Please turn to page 228)

Photographs above and below show approximately the same area of kitchen before and after remodeling. Old door leading to front of house and dining room was replaced by one that slides into the wall. By opening pass-through to dining room, this area became serving center, which saves endless trips to dining room. Drawers below counter hold silver and other serving needs. Special warmer installed above pass-through counter keeps foods hot until meal is ready to be served.

Give the party

The Elizabethan evening staged by Mrs. Kennedy can become a memorable party in your own home through the wealth of poetry, drama, and music on records

● Among the stimulating aspects of the Kennedy Administration have been the First Lady's enthusiasm for the arts and her taste and ingenuity in the planning of entertainments for state occasions. Mrs. Kennedy's flair for hospitality in this rather stiff and formidable area has captured the imaginations of many Americans, regardless of party affiliation, who read reports of White House affairs with excited interest and possessive pride.

President and Mrs. Kennedy recently welcomed a royal guest, Grand Duchess Charlotte of Luxembourg, with a state dinner, followed by a program of Elizabethan music and poetry. The evening was typical of Mrs. Kennedy's originality and thoughtful planning. The dignity of the offering seemed especially appropriate to the serenity of Europe's longest-reigning contemporary monarch. The program was suited in scale to the stage of the White House in the spacious East Room with its portraits, urns of fresh flowers, and crystal chandeliers.

Mrs. Kennedy undoubtedly has superior resources to draw on when planning such a party, but anyone with a taste for antique music and the exquisite poems of Shakespeare's day can follow the First Lady's lead and plan an evening straight from the golden summer of the Renaissance. If the ubiquitous cocktail party has begun to pall, an Elizabethan evening can provide a sizable number of guests with a memorable occasion, and may revive your interest in entertaining.

Mrs. Kennedy auditioned her performers by way of recordings. She chose the Consort Players to provide the music. This group of six instrumentalists performs on such antique instruments as the virginal, the cittern, the treble viol, the bass viol, the flute, the pandora, and the lute. Organized by Sydney Beck, head of the rare-book and manuscript collections of the music division of the New York Public Library, these scholarly musicians have been giving concerts for the past ten years. For the Elizabethan readings, Basil Rathbone was chosen for his impeccable diction and the beauty and resonance of his voice.

Mrs. Kennedy telephoned the artists herself. When Mr. Rathbone heard that Mrs. Kennedy was calling him, he almost failed to pick up the phone, convinced it was a joke. When he heard her voice, he almost dropped the telephone. She asked him to appear on the program, specified the poems she preferred, and requested as an encore the St. Crispin Day speech, delivered before the Battle of Agincourt in Shakespeare's Henry V. This is the President's favorite passage from Shakespeare. Mrs. Kennedy asked him not to Basil Rathbone was chosen by Mrs. Kennedy for the Elizabethan readings at the White House party. Selections included poems by Shakespeare, Marlowe, Donne, Herrick, Jonson. As an encore, Mrs. Kennedy chose the St. Crispin Day speech, delivered before the Battle of Agincourt in Shakespeare's Henry V. A Presidential favorite, it was a planned surprise for him.

they gave in the White House

mention the encore to anyone. She said she wanted to surprise her husband, who knows the lengthy passage by heart and often quotes it.

When Mr. Rathbone met Mrs. Kennedy before the dinner at the White House, she said to him, like a conspirator, "Don't forget our secret." Mr. Rathbone said later it would have been impossible for him to forget their secret but admitted that the President's prowess with the St. Crispin Day speech "scared the daylights out of me." He was afraid he would forget the lines.

The program of instrumental music, interspersed with the reading of 16th- and 17th-century poems, against a musical background, was varied with solos and duets by vocalists. The brilliant assemblage of 170 persons responded with hushed stillness to the haunting beauty of the music and poetry, then gave their enthusiastic applause.

Advance planning is intrinsic in this sort of party, as evidenced by Mrs. Kennedy's definitive interest in all details. You, too, can audition your performers. An impressive list of recordings of Elizabethan poetry and music makes it possible to explore the charms of 16th-century drama, song, verse, street cries, ballads, carols, tales, and tavern ditties. You can listen to the recordings and select your favorites. The guest list for such an evening should rely on kindred spirits, but the success of the limpid folk singer warbling "Green Sleeves" in a crowded supper club indicates that this sort of entertainment may prove irresistible for fairly unlikely people. It is music to soothe the savage breast.

Make a list of the recordings to be played, interspersing instrumental music with song and the spoken word, and arrange recordings in the order to be played. Provide for intermission and the replenishing of beverages. Be certain that people are comfortably seated, for nothing distracts the listener like a foot that has gone to sleep. The stiff rows of straight chairs which were once the hallmark of a musicalé are not absolutely necessary to the Elizabethan evening. An atmosphere of intimacy is preferable. This will warn you not to invite more people than you can comfortably accommodate. Subdued light—firelight and candlelight are ideal—will add to the listeners' pleasure.

A more ambitious Elizabethan evening is a live performance. You may be able to accomplish this with little difficulty if you are part of a musical or dramatic circle. If not, almost every city or town has musicians who are members of the Amateur Chamber Music Players or the American Recorder Society, both national organizations. These instrumentalists usually play together in informal sessions and would be likely to welcome the opportunity of an audience. Almost all colleges and universities have madrigal and lute enthusiasts, for this music appeals especially to 20th-century youth. The recorder, which was so popular in Shakespeare's time (Henry VIII owned seventy-six recorders) has had a splendid renaissance in the 20th Century because it is so easy to play. Many young people are now competent on this instrument. Few glee clubs are without their Elizabethan part-singing numbers and madrigal soloists. Check with the music and drama department of the nearest college for performers. If there is no college available, ask the choral director of the high school or the choirmaster of your church for possibilities.

Little-theater groups or amateur acting circles can usually provide you with an actor to read the Elizabethan poets or passages from Shakespeare's plays. An opportunity to expose this sort of talent is usually welcomed by amateurs. If there are no professional or semiprofessional performers available, a good reader can often rise to the occasion. Reading aloud is an attribute that seems to have fallen into disuse, but Elizabethan literature is inspiring. A lawyer, for instance, is apt to find himself carried away by such an assignment. Guests may also enjoy participating in the singing, if you rally them around the piano or a recorder. Sheet music for both instruments and voices is plentiful, and musically inclined persons will soon find themselves enchanted by the part-singing of the Elizabethan age.

The participation of all guests in the evening's entertainment will add to their pleasure. This will be hastened if you provide them with lyrics and literature. Much of this material is now in paperback books, and the thoughtful hostess will offer guests Elizabethan verse anthologies, Shakespeare's plays, Elizabethan song books, madrigals, and consort music, so that they can follow (Please turn to page 242)

the longest
of

staging

By OSCAR KEELING MOORE

■ Tulips, like most other bulbs, are not difficult to grow. You simply plant them and let nature do the rest. Rarely do they fail to flower. They need no coaxing. They are about as trouble-free and as easy in maintenance as any flower you'll ever grow.

But to enhance their magnificence you should exercise judgment, if you are to exploit them to the fullest. In short, you must lend a helping hand—an artistic helping hand. This will revolve mainly about how you place and group your tulips, and how you select the types and the appropriate colors.

Selection of appropriate companion plants to flower with them is crucial to getting dramatic effects. Proper underplanting (or foreground planting) with low-growing annuals or perennials is the stagecraft you must apply. If companions are to flower simultaneously, choose them in hues that are harmonious with the tulips. Most underplantings will have a long-enough season of bloom to outlast the successive flowering of two or more kinds of tulips.

How you manage your tulips during their foliage dieback period is an inevitable problem. But the best solution for this is to use underplantings of other types, so the yellowing tulip leaves droop down and out of sight into the green underplantings. (See story on this on page 250.)

Effective tulip display depends on your having some knowledge of the tulip types, for their type determines their time of bloom, their height, their flower form, and, in some instances, their color range. You wouldn't buy clothes or shoes by mail without specifying sizes. Neither should you buy tulips without knowing their height, type, time of bloom, and color. (To assist you in this, we have prepared the table on page 254.)

Botanically, tulips are lilies. Over 60 species have been named. There are approximately 800 varieties in cultivation, divided into 23 classes. Each of the latter have distinctive characteristics. Tulip breeders continually introduce new varieties, but not until each has been garden-tested and appraised for merit and officially registered by name and class.

But for all of the appeal of the new introductions, many of the cherished old classic varieties are as exciting as ever. For example, there's the red Darwin tulip, William Pitt, which was introduced in 1905; the lilac-colored Darwin, William Copland (1910); the unsurpassable white, lilac-edged Mendel tulip, Her Grace (1926); and, the vivacious Ted Champion parrot tulip (1930). These old stalwarts get smaller type and space in the catalogues, but you should not forget them.

Tulip classes

Tulips are divided into two major groups: the species that originally were the wild forms, and the hybrids that have been derived from them. Hundreds of varieties that make up the bulk of those that are grown today in our gardens are hybrids. The species and hybrid groups are divided into 23 classes, such as the Darwin, Darwin Hybrid, Lily-flowered, Triumph, and Double Late, to name a few.

In selecting tulip varieties for your garden, it is helpful to know the class from which they come and the characteristics of that class. For example, the Single Early and Double Early classes are short-stemmed. These are excellent for casual planting in informal drifts and in rock gardens. When placed in beds, they should go in front of taller plants. Their shorter stature qualifies them for use wherever masses of color are wanted.

If your garden is a formal one or approaches the formal—with squares, rectangles, and circles—your tulips may be set out in straight rows. Tulips, like hyacinths, lend themselves well to formal display. The real secret of their use in a dramatic formal setting is that they be used in adequate depth. Never use them in straight rows, which makes for a thin, spindly effect.

Instead, set them out with a planned, reckless abandon in clusters or drifts—in short, (Please turn to page 252)

New furniture with a go-with-everything look

New pieces, touched by tradition, reflect a current liking for designs that revive old forms, that blend rather than match, and fit in with what exists

By FRANCES HEARD

In many ways this furniture seems to look to the East for its influence, yet there are no outright or rigid copies of any one genre of design. It is a general echoing of familiar traditional characteristics that are comfortable to live with—rounded forms, applied ornament, and much playing-up of wood, with great attention to finish.

on the following two pages*

◀ This group revives certain furniture types loved in the past and now returning because they are appropriate to modern living—for example, the exposed-frame chair and sofa (note the updating originality of woven leather sofa arm, opposite) and the pedestal “library” table, which also becomes useful for meals and games.

NEW FURNITURE WITH A

With modern living frequently a matter of many moves, there is need for furniture that accommodates itself to many backgrounds and a variety of use, something the matched "suites" of former days were too inflexible to accomplish gracefully. This curtained china cabinet, equipped with display lighting, might become a collection vitrine or a bookcase in a living room. The upholstered dining chairs might be used individually.

The 80-inch-high headboard was inspired by gates of an oriental palace, yet it does not force the whole room to look oriental. It is quite compatible with a French fabric pattern, a Spanish door, a modern ceramic lamp.

Carved motifs and moldings of the pedestal table and the shaped wood frame of the armchairs suggest the spirit rather than the identical line of oriental design, yet all assemble well under the art nouveau shape and colorings of a Tiffany lamp.

End table, supported by eight columns, has the architectural look of an Eastern temple. Most wood used in this new furniture collection is pecan, frequently embellished by veneers of butterwood, myrtle burl, Javanese walnut or Cambodian burl.

High chest (below), fitted out as a wardrobe, might function as a storage cabinet in many rooms. Collection also reflects Eastern opulence in its hardware, washed in 24-karat gold. Several pieces come in green-malachite or ebony finish.

Bedside chest could easily switch its function from night table to a living-room lamp table. Dresser, shown opposite, is designed to be used also as a buffet. Tops of tables and chests may be of beige-brown marble agate called "Botticelli."

Hi-Lo table does double duty, reducing itself from 28-inch tea-table height (above) to an 18-inch-high coffee table (left). The scissor-leg base turns on its side. The 42-inch top pivots on a double-action hinge, then fits securely on lowered base. In oiled teak or ebony finish. Brown-Saltman.

The sympathetic, serviceable tea table

By JOHN ELLESTAD

■ Watch the renaissance of the tea table, a piece of furniture introduced to the American scene in 1705, when tea-drinking was a novel, high-fashion ritual. Designed to make the service of tea in the parlor a graceful event, it usually stands 26 to 28 inches high, a comfortable height for serving and eating. But currently it also fills the need for games or a reading surface. Its size is decoratively important, and since modern furniture has been rising higher off the floor than it has been in years, such a table is pleasantly in scale with other furnishings in contemporary rooms.

Furniture with a built-in bonus

• On these two pages you see five good examples of furniture with a double purpose in life.

Designed to serve two functions, such furniture can save you space and expense. It can also work better decoratively. Achieving your ends with fewer pieces is always a desirable goal.

You don't have to sacrifice style to gain these benefits. Furniture with an extra talent can be as handsome as any other, and built to the same high standards of quality and craftsmanship. The only real difference you are likely to find is that its greater utility may make you love it more.

It's a table and bar, or a place for general storage (for a movie projector and films, perhaps?). Practical laminate top; 24" across, 21" high; brass hardware; oak or mahogany; $270. The McGuire Co.

New flexibility in furniture— thanks to bunching and nesting

Three different heights are useful. The largest is just right for an end table; the others are fine for chair-side or cocktail tables. Richardson/Nemschoff. About $100 the set.

● When you need extra seats or tables for guests, or want to alter the appearance or function of a room, the perfect solution is the kind of flexible furniture shown here.

The idea of bunched or nested pieces is not new. But in the past, the individual pieces were not always successful when out of the nest. They did not have the design, finish, or stability to really stand on their own. Such is not the case today. Every unit shown here is handsome unto itself. It looks well alone, and it looks well bunched or nested.

The continuity of design required to fit this kind of furniture into attractive spacesaving modules is a definite asset. Even when a number of pieces are used at random in a room, their design-relationship helps establish a sense of over-all unity.

Ottoman rolls and stores neatly under marble-topped table. Used with sofa, it's an instant chaise longue. Table and two ottomans would also be useful. From Valley Upholstery. Table, $175; ottoman, $85; sofa, $275.

Most nesting units may be extended in place or used in different locations. Expandability is particularly valuable for a coffee table. It can be adjusted to accommodate the number using it. Kittinger, about $450 the set.

THREE PHOTOGRAPHS BY GEORGE SMALL

These modular tables may be used separately or grouped in a variety of ways. Three in a row make a long coffee table; four together make a square one. Tops are simulated slate; frames are walnut. They are  $18\frac{1}{2}$ " square and  $15\frac{1}{2}$ " high. "Dania II," from American of Martinsville. About \$40 each.

Brunch tables of walnut with tops of black laminated plastic may be used separately or together. Hexagonal shapes group easily. "Shalimar," Thomasville Furniture. About $50 each.

Cocktail tables and stools of matching size and shape. Table tops are walnut veneer, set in pecan solids. Stools have upholstered seats. Pieces are 24" wide, 17" high. "Perennian," by Heritage. Stools in muslin, $93 each; tables, $60 each.

Versatile cocktail and occasional tables have hinged tops and space for storage inside. Side panels are reversible, red and simulated gold leaf. Wood is walnut. Tables are 20" square, 18" high. "Cantonesian," by Heritage Furniture. $130 each.

What Condominium may mean to you

This new, rapidly expanding form of cooperative ownership involves less risk than the usual co-op. Originally, condominium applied only to multi-unit apartment dwellings, but it is now being extended to cover groups of one-family houses

By MILES COLEAN

House Beautiful's Economic Consultant

■ A new word has come into use in the vocabulary of residential real estate—"condominium."

Actually the word is a very old one, coming from the term in ancient Roman law for joint ownership. It has been maintained in the legal language of Latin countries to apply to the individual ownership of living space in an apartment building or other multiple-dwelling group together with common ownership of land and jointly used facilities.

The rather extensive use of this type of ownership in nearby Puerto Rico brought the term, and the form, to the attention of the American real estate industry. As a result, and in order to help advance the adoption of the idea for residential uses, legislation enacted in 1961 authorized the Federal Housing Administration to insure mortgages on condominiums (or -ums, if you prefer it). Since that time, many states have modified their statutes to make this type of ownership feasible, and the possibilities it offers are now beginning to be realized.

Just what is condominium? In the words of Mr. Charles E. Ramsey of the Chicago Title and Trust Company, it is a type of "individual ownership of a one-family unit in a multi-family structure, together with ownership of undivided interest in the land and all other parts of the structure in common with all other owners of one-family units in the building." Mr. Ramsey elaborates his definition as follows: "It means ownership in common with others of a parcel of land and certain parts of a building thereon which would normally be used by all the occupants—such as yards, foundations, basements, floors, walls, hallways, stairways, elevators, and all other related common elements—together with individual ownership in fee of a particular unit or apartment in such building."

While the definitions just cited assume that the condominium is limited to a multifamily structure, this is not necessarily the case, since state laws vary as to the type of dwelling structure that may be involved. In some instances, it is possible for the condominium to consist of a grouping of houses in which the common property is limited to park and recreational areas, including tennis courts, swimming pools, and similar facilities, with their related structures.

Condominium is thus a kind of cooperative ownership. Like the better-known forms of cooperatives, it carries with it an obligation to pay an appropriate share of the maintenance and repair of common spaces and common parts of the property, such as grounds, roofs, outside walls, water mains, plumbing stacks, and central heating and air-conditioning equipment. The obligation also extends to the owner's responsibility for the proper maintenance of his own property and avoidance of alterations that affect the appearance of the property. Failure to meet this obligation constitutes a valid claim against the owner by the condominium and could result in the loss of ownership, as is true of other cooperative housing. But with this the likeness ends.

In the kind of cooperative with which we are more familiar, the individual occupant simply owns stock in a corporation, or a beneficial interest in a trust which is the legal owner of the entire property, and at the same time he is holder of what is called a "proprietary lease" in the dwelling unit he occupies. Actually he is a tenant in a building of which he is part owner. The entire property is taxed as a single entity and financed as a single entity; and the proprietary tenant (or stockholder, if he likes that term better) is jointly responsible for payment of taxes and mortgage charges as well as of maintenance cost. Irrespective of the fact that he may have fully paid his assessments for all these purposes, his lease may be canceled and he may lose his interest in the property if there is a sufficient default by his fellow stockholder tenants to (Continued on page 237)

Household scale is wall-mounted on custom bracket that lowers scale to counter for use, and lifts back against wall for storage. It is 8" by 10" by 2" high, flat and compact, and will weigh from two ounces to fifty pounds.

Not only does this refrigerator have variable temperature settings, but it provides constant circulation of freshened air, to keep foods at their peak. The freezer compartment, used for day-to-day supplies, has its own ice-maker connected to the water line, so it automatically replenishes the supply of cubes as they are used. Although this combination occupies only six square feet of floor space, its overall capacity is 15.4 cu. ft. With the old 11 cu. ft. freezer that stands in the pantry, we have ample storage for frozen foods.

The 30" modular range with eye-level oven in the cooking center, at the opposite end of the kitchen, is a marvel of engineering and automation. It can make a good cook of anyone who can read. By merely setting a clock and dialing my family's preference of doneness, I can transfer a roast from the freezer to the oven in the morning and know it will be cooked to perfection at the dinner hour I've selected. The cook-top also performs in magical fashions. You'll notice it is lower than adjacent counters. Instead of 36" height, it is 32" high, ideal for stirring, and it lets me see into pots and pans. A heat-minder unit controls the cooking temperature, so boil-overs and scorched foods are gone forever. Even the electric outlet on the range may be preset and timed.

On those few occasions when I entertain on a larger scale, the cooking facilities can be doubled by using my thermostatically controlled frypans and saucepans. They plug into the wall appliance center that is wired for heavy wattage requirements, and store below counter on pull-out sliding shelves. The more weight carried, the more easily they glide.

The stainless-steel sink, within equal distance of range and refrigerator, is unique. It has its own fluorescent work light, which also serves ideally as a night light for my teen-age refrigerator raiders. The sink has many convenience features: an electric outlet at each end of the lighting fixture, a switch for the disposer, and a built-in spray faucet that is very useful. Its handy cutting board and vegetable rinsing basket store below, fitting in comfortably beside the food disposer.

The cabinets below the sink have galleried shelves to hold dishwasher detergent and other cleaning aids. There's also a pull-out rack here where tea towels can be hung to dry.

The dishwasher is a delight, for in my household the bowls and platters come in odd shapes and sizes, all of which can go into this machine. I can even put extra-large roasters and pots in by removing the upper basket and using the sturdy support designed for this purpose. It has another feature that appeals to my feelings about getting dishes sterile-clean. While the hot water is 165° at the kitchen faucet, I can have dishes rinsed at an even higher temperature by the push of a button. In addition to its normal heater, this unit has a heat booster that can raise the water temperature for either or both the second wash and rinse cycles.

ONE of the most often used appliances in my kitchen is the mixing center, which is built into the counter across from the dishwasher. The whirl of its blender in the morning, as the frozen juice is reconstituted, is as familiar as the sound of the perking coffee-maker, and it's in use off and on all day.

Because it's in view and ready to use, it sees full service for cake mixing, for slicing vegetables, for chopping meat. Its various parts are within arm's reach on a shelf below. Spatulas and tools are in drawers. Packaged mixes, flavorings, and other baking needs are kept in wall cabinets directly above. Everything is stored where it's used, even though this means duplication of tools.

One small accessory in this area that fascinates friends who see it is the recipe holder. I'm not only a collector of recipes, but I'm forever changing and redoing them. Recipes are kept on 3 x 5 typed cards and filed. But a recipe card on the counter isn't easy to read, so it is often picked up in the midst of cooking, with fingers that are a bit sticky or greasy. With the help of Frank Siarkowski, a friend of ours, a solution was devised.

It is a recipe holder that when not in use is hidden from view under the wall cabinet. It pulls down and forward, and when the card touches it, it stays in place magnetically. Held at eye level, the card is easy to read and completely out of the line of spatters and soil. It works perfectly, so well, in fact, that it's now being marketed.

In this same area is a food scale, wall-hung. Taking a cue from the bathroom scales that fold up against the wall, I had a bracket custom-made that would serve this purpose. You can see how it works on page 228.

Another convenience that spares everyone's nerves in a three-story house, where music is always in the air, is the built-in stereo intercom. This permits me to talk to any member of the family in any room indoors, or on the patio outdoors. It's saving on nerves and the vocal chords.

Such conveniences, combined with top equipment and pleasing surroundings that are very easy to keep, make mine a way-out-ahead kitchen.

wing for themselves, a wing for the children, and a living area to be used and enjoyed by all.

The parents' wing has a library that can also be used as a guest room. When the children are older and are using the living area to entertain their friends, the library will be the place to which the parents can retreat, if they so desire. The inclusion of the garage in this wing might be questioned by some, but this arrangement works well here since groceries are usually store-delivered to the kitchen door.

The children's wing contains three bedrooms, plus a bedroom and bath for the maid who watches over the children's domain. The hall in this wing widens midway in its length into a bay projecting into the court. This bay now serves as a play area. It can later be furnished as a pleasant sitting room. The bay is advantageously located; it is possible for the children playing here to see—and be seen from—many parts of the house.

The central living area is the dominant space of the house. Its design character, as can be seen in the photos, has been continued throughout the house, but varied according to the use of the rooms.

Although the central unit is rather large, it has been divided into smaller, separate areas of use. The entry area is separated from the dining area by a storage unit with closets for coats on the entrance side and a sideboard for the dining area on the other. The dining area is in turn separated from the living area by the sculptural brick mass of the fireplace.

The living area, although it is accessible from other parts of the house, is removed from the paths of daily traffic. It is a quietly exciting space to which one may go just to sit and to enjoy the sensation of being in it. It is simple in form, but its effect is not so simple. The graceful, laminated wood arches, painted to accentuate their shape in contrast with the walls and ceilings, give a soaring quality to the space. The free interplay of light and color effected within the space by the glass in the gables abstractly echoes the colors and moods of Long Island Sound.

This house, as do the others in this issue, indicates that we are seeking out the element of splendor in our lives. After rejecting the splendors of the past, we are beginning to search for a splendor of our own. Some will again seek for it in the past. But others, as this house indicates with its light and space, will create it imaginatively and without pretense, in the terms of our beliefs and our way of living in our time—and place.

Since Mrs. Snow loves to entertain, this large area makes it possible for her to have big crowds easily. She has served as many as 35 at lunch.

The kitchen, though open to the dining space across a wide counter-high partition, is nevertheless sufficiently shut off so that the cooking does not become part of the living area. All the equipment is conveniently placed around the walls of the squarish space. Since there is no concern in this house about the traffic of young children, the kitchen has doors at opposite ends of the room in the most convenient places. One leads to the dining room, the other through a combination pantry-laundry to the entry hall.

At the center of the large central space, the ceiling follows the gabled roof line. However, to give an intimacy of scale and prevent a person alone in the space from feeling dwarfed by it, the spaces at the sides—the studio and Mrs. Snow's bedroom—both have low ceilings and are delightfully snug.

The intimacy and security of the house is reinforced by its simple materials and the manner in which they have been used to shape the space. The stonework of the piers, walls, and fireplaces gives a comforting sense of rugged sturdiness. The organization of the structure, the beams and piers, has an apparent and reassuring simplicity.

But combined with this simplicity of materials and structure is a richness of texture, of detail, of kinds of spaces and views.

The views are all-important, and the house exploits them well. There is the breath-taking view of the mountainous countryside, framed in the large central opening at the end of the room, where it extends outward onto the balcony. This is the first thing that you see as you enter the room. You can step outside and enjoy the view without leaving the security of the house. The balcony is 14' in the air and has no access from below.

There are many other views to be seen through the slots between the piers and the walls, through the high clerestory windows over the fireplace, and through the glazed gable above the translucent glass panels. They give the house a see-through quality and yet maintain its privacy.

Perhaps it should be pointed out here that the two other houses in this issue also have this particular quality of presenting a predominant view of the landscape or some natural feature. And with this they also present intriguing glimpses of the same view, or some other bit of nature. These are integrally woven—not always in the same way—into the spatial fabric of the house. These are a part of their charm.

It is this act of presentation, providing a special frame or setting, that gives a quality of rareness to the view—or the glimpse of a view. Very often the glimpse can have a kind of excitement that the full view lacks. Whether the presentation is of a dramatic, distant scene, or of some intriguing, close-up detail, what is being presented is never the same. It changes with the moods of the weather, the time of day, and the season of the year. With these changes, a particularly vital richness is added to the experience of living here.

Though rich in its living experience, the house is built of materials that are inexpensive locally. The stone for the walls and floor is native and costs little more than the cost of hauling it. Where walls are wood, they are a lower-grade fir. Cabinets are made of fir plywood, with an opaque-pigment finish to kill the grain and add color (see photographs of the kitchen on page 180). The use of these simple materials, it need hardly be pointed out, brings down the time and cost of maintenance and the original cost.

finally bring about a foreclosure.

It is this circumstance that often creates a special hazard in cooperative ownership, especially in time of serious economic distress. Condominium does eliminate a great part of this hazard. It may be referred to as "limited-risk cooperative ownership."

IN A condominium, the individual dwelling unit, whether it is in a tall apartment building, a garden-apartment structure, or other type of group arrangement, is separately owned. It is taxed separately and it may be mortgaged separately, just as if it were a single-family house on its own plot of ground. Thus, the condominium owner cannot be dispossessed by reason of any failure on the part of his neighbors in the enterprise for non-payment of taxes or mortgage charges, as may be the case with the better-known cooperative.

Within his own dwelling unit, the owner has approximately the freedom of the owner of a single-family house. He may decorate it to suit his fancy, and he may alter or renovate it to any extent he desires so long as he does not affect the structural elements of the building or, except with general consent, impinge on any of its parts that are held in common.

It must, of course, be recognized that freedom under condominium cannot be quite the same as that with a detached single-family dwelling. There are the normal proprieties that anyone must observe when living in close proximity to others. There is the obligation to contribute proportionately to the maintenance, repair, and operation of the property and perhaps temporarily to make some additional payment in case of a default by another owner. There is usually some limitation on the right to sell without permitting the other owners a first refusal to purchase the unit at a price which a bona-fide purchaser will pay.

On the other hand, condominium has distinct advantages. It involves less risk than an ordinary cooperative. It relieves the owner of the direct responsibility for maintaining the grounds and handling normal routine of maintenance and operation. If condominium may be called cooperation with limited risk, it may also be called home ownership with a minimum burden. For those who wish to enjoy the sense of ownership without the need to be concerned about the grass-cutting or the oil in the tank, it offers an alluring prospect.

The common affairs and responsibilities of a condominium are usually conducted through an association of which all owners are members and in which is vested the right and obligation to make assessments for the common operation, to collect and enforce payment of the assessments, and to conduct the general management and operation of the enterprise. The voting rights of each member are usually determined by his proportionate interest in the property. The powers of the association are exercised by elected member-officers, who employ such persons (agents, or contractors) as may be required to carry out their decisions.

While the condominium concept has most frequently been applied to multistory buildings, it is, as indicated earlier, not restricted to this type of property. As qualified by the Federal Housing Administration, the property must include at least five family units which may be located in one or more structures, containing two or more units each. The separate structures, according to FHA, "may be high-rise, garden type, semidetached, or row type in character." The only thing excluded is a project consisting of fully detached single-family houses.

ALTHOUGH this limitation may not apply to cases in which the liberal terms of FHA-insured mortgage financing are not important, the limitation nevertheless is a practical one, since the purchase and resale of the individual dwellings will be much facilitated if the ability to obtain such financing is present. Even at that, the qualification leaves a wide range of attractive possibilities for both suburban and in-town locations.

Through the use of condominium, the owner may have assurance of the constant and uniform maintenance of his living environment. It gives him built-in protection against the depreciation in value that can result from the indifference or lapses of his neighbors. In a period when the trend may well be toward more compact living, and when the town house may vie with or outvie the separate house on its more or less self-protecting grounds, these advantages attain a special importance. Condominium offers the best medium for joint action for a common purpose that has yet been devised. We are certain to witness its wide acceptance.

IT ISN'T FAR FROM LONDON . . .

as well to relax, take things as they come in all their profusion, and if the going gets too thick, turn his back on the great city and set off for a day or two into the pleasures that surround it. You can justify such a sortie, even if you haven't seen Westminster Abbey or the changing of the guard at Buckingham Palace, by remembering that London isn't England any more than New York is the U.S.A., so you're getting a deeper look at the country for your money. (Another thing to remember is to retain your hotel room if you're away overnight and expect to return to town, for accommodations in London are always hard to get.)

WHERE, then, should you go?

If you look at the map, you will see that all of England isn't far from London, never more than a day's journey. Even within an hour's time you can be in a totally different atmosphere, even in a different era. Brighton, for instance, is one hour by train from Victoria Station, and if many Britons look down their aquiline noses at it as being a touch too hoi polloi, this seems to us all the more reason why visiting outlanders should give it a whirl if they want to see the natives at play. Besides, it's a good opportunity to get some sea air along the famous Promenade.

Primarily, we'd make Brighton an out-of-London must because of the Royal Pavilion—not, as many Americans imagine, a seaside entertainment pier, but an extravagant pseudo-oriental palace, built to the profligate fancy of the Prince Regent, son of George III, as a pleasant retreat from the city for himself and friends. These included his morganatic wife, Mrs. Fitzherbert, and Beau Brummel, the sartorial cynosure of the day.

The place is an unforgettable reminder of the damage preciousness and money spent for the sake of spending can do to architecture, for it started out as a classically lovely Georgian building and ended up as a fantasy of Mogul domes, turrets, and minarets, decorated within with lush chinoiserie. It is a repository of some fine regency furniture and some magnificent decorative workmanship. But the real stopper is the kitchen, big as a ballroom, with one whole wall covered in a graduated collection of copper cookware from pipit to bathtub size. Shows you the kind of goings-on they went in for. You couldn't get a better show anywhere for the two-shillings-and-sixpence admission fee, about 25 cents.

About that going down to Kew business, it's a lovely garden pilgrimage in or out of lilac time, and you can be there in an hour and fifteen minutes, having seen much of London from the river en route, if you take one of the Thames Launches Ltd. boats from the Westminster Embankment. From May to mid-September they leave on the half-hour, starting at eleven, with an abbreviated schedule the rest of the year. Another big bargain in sightseeing for four shillings and sixpence, about 70¢.

Within easy driving distance of London there are more visitable stately homes, castles, and gardens than we could possibly list here, the route to them in every case taking you through the sort of rural scenery you've always expected to find in England. For an excellent guide, and an eye-opening list of the variety of these splendid old places and the times they are open to the public, we recommend an investment in Historic Houses, Castles & Gardens in Great Britain and Ireland (including the Republic of Ireland's roster, too). It costs three shillings and sixpence at bookstalls in England, but you can get it before you depart these shores by sending $1 to Index Publishers Ltd., 69 Victoria Street, London, S.W.1. A new edition is published every January. A look at its map shows you that plenty of stately-home viewing is feasible near the city.

THE classic one-day conducted bus tours out of London do the Stoke Poges, Windsor, Eton, Hampton Court circuit, Blenheim Palace and Oxford, Canterbury, Cambridge, and Stratford-on-Avon and Warwick Castle, and tours of nearby stately homes have become popular. Some of the best-known operators of these are Universal, Southdown, Evan Evans, Frames, and Samuelson. Generally, English guides are well informed and literate. Our own inclination is to go alone more expensively, with a guide-chauffeur and a car to ourselves, for we like to feel free to dawdle or move on as things do or do not catch our eye and interest, whether we're "supposed" to look at them or not. Quite naturally, the conducted tour has to maintain a steady pace, usually a dogtrot. Mind you, we don't spurn this kind of operation. It's a good way to get a quick over-all look at things and decide what you want to return to to savor later at leisure, if you should ever have any of that precious commodity. And if it's a choice of going in a body or not going at all, we'd certainly recommend joining the group and frankly letting the world know you're a tourist. We think there's been far too much supercilious criticism of that eager stout-booted breed.

To give you an idea of what our favorite type of sightseeing costs in England, a four-passenger Ford Anglia De Luxe (three sightseers and a chauffeur) runs about $23 a day, with a charge of 21 cents a mile in excess of eight miles, plus $5.60 a day for the chauffeur's board and lodging, plus petrol, which is about 75 cents a gallon. The hourly rate is $2.45. Literally going it alone, in a drive-yourself car of the same type, costs $4.20 daily plus about four and a half cents a mile. Your own driver's license suffices, and all you are implored to do is to obey traffic signals and remember to keep left, which is not always easy when you're simultaneously trying to take in what you are looking at.

SOME of the better-known car-hire firms in London are Victor Britain, J. Davey, Godfrey Davis, Kenning, Swann, and Maxwell Williams.

Your real dyed-in-the-wool sightseer seems to hotfoot it to Stratford-on-Avon whether he ever heard of Hamlet or not, and consequently the old-world atmosphere of the little town has become unenchantingly overlaid with souvenir shops, tearooms, hamburger restaurants, and traffic tieups to the extent that the Shakespeare shrines almost seem secondary. (We except Ann Hathaway's cottage in Shottery, where the old-fashioned garden is a beauty, and dignity seems to prevail.) Perhaps in the dead of winter the atmosphere might be less disillusioning than it appears to be in spring, summer and early fall—or in the dead of night.

Nonetheless, one feature of Stratford which could not disillusion anyone is the quality of the performances given by the Royal Shakespeare Theatre. The theater itself, which many expect to find a replica of the Globe or at least reminiscent of Shakespeare's time, is an astonishingly contemporary building, with a restaurant overlooking the Avon through glass walls. It's an incongruity, if you will, but it works. And anyhow, the play's the thing here, freshly and imaginatively presented on every count, from stage sets to diction. The season this year is running from April to December, concentrating on The Tempest, Julius Caesar, The Comedy of Errors, and a sequence of the history plays.

(You can also get a taste of this company's general proficiency right in London at the Aldwych Theatre, where they present a continuous repertory of new and classic plays.)

You can make it to Stratford from London and be back on the same day, if you settle for a matinee. Take the ten-o'clock morning train from Paddington Station, arrive at 12:07 with time to look around and have lunch before the performance begins at 2:30. (Most evening performances start at eight.) The last evening train back to London is at 7:38. Evan Evans runs this matinee visit by bus. The sad news, however, is that seats for the performances are booked months in advance, so this is not something you just drop in on. We've heard of hardy souls who go to Stratford, anyhow, and take their chances on last-minute cancellations. Ashton & Mitchell's booking agency at 2 Old Bond Street miraculously turned up tickets for us when all seemed lost, but everyone can't be that lucky. The theater restaurant serves lunch beginning at 12:30 and dinner before and after evening performances, but here again book in advance (a procedure which is practically ritual in all English restaurants, anyway). Get more information by writing to the theater.

Our last Stratford experience was part of a two-day-one-night motor trip out of London. Our itinerary, which we grant might have included more dawdling time, ran thus:

We left London at nine A.M., heading for Oxford in time for lunch. The road takes you through the witch country about Wycombe, and with an earlier start there would have been time to stop by at Woodstock on the way and take a look at Blenheim Palace, the Palladian Mansion of the Dukes of Marlborough and birthplace of Winston Churchill.

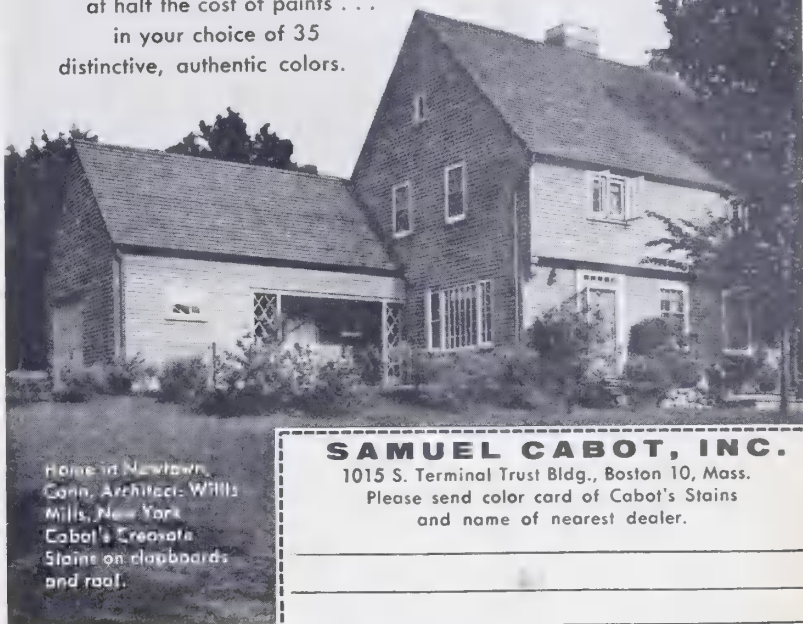

AT OXFORD, we lunched at The Mitre, the ramblingest of rambling old inns. And here, had we booked our luncheon reservations ahead and had not been so bemused by the waiters in tail coats at one P.M. and the fact that we were at long last eating the dessert called gooseberry fool, we should have had more time to spend seeing the colleges of the university. These are not found in one concentrated spot but spread about the town, which has developed some traffic complications and one-way streets over the years so greenhorns do better to park a car and move on foot. This lunch-stop, once-over-lightly treatment of Oxford is by no means the equivalent of really visiting the place, but it does provide a taste of it. (You haven't seen Oxford, we think, unless you've done some browsing among the manuscript exhibits in the Bodleian Library and strolled the willow-hung banks of the Isis, as the Thames is called hereabouts.)

Stratford by 4:30—time to see something of the Shakespeare landmarks. We put up out of town at the Welcombe Hotel, a handsome, peaceful estate in the high-chimneyed, red-brick Elizabethan manner, set in beautifully manicured lawns and surrounded by woods where Will may well have poached in his early days. The hotel is much patronized by English families, and gave us a sense of the great-house weekends we've been reading about all our life in English novels. And while the house is in placid, fresh-egg-and-cream country, it is only a five-minute drive from the Shakespeare theater. Late dinner is provided for theatergoers.

At nine the next morning we were off to Warwick Castle. You can visit the great rooms of the castle, which are long on fine armor and family portraits; but we were most taken by the building itself and the loveliness of the landscaped grounds, literally forested in rhododendron and incredibly maintained by three gardeners. And, almost best of all, 38 peacocks roam the place, spreading their feathery fans.

Next stop was the rust-red ruin of romantic Kenilworth Castle, haunted in our opinion by its most famous visitor, Elizabeth I. It is now in process of reconstruction, curiously surrounded by a neighborhood of lath and timber houses.

THEN on to what was the most affecting experience of the weekend—Coventry, and the newly built cathedral, rising like a phoenix from the rubble of the bombed city and juxtaposed to the ruins of the old cathedral, which is still used for services, its broken form still magnificent. The new cathedral, designed by Sir Basil Spence and adorned with an almost overwhelming profusion of avant-garde religious art in glass, metal, mosaic, tapestry, and ceramic, is unquestionably controversial. But none can question the profundity of its symbolism and the piety of the contemporary artists who worked on it. The spirit out of which it was built still comes through—the hope that all men can live in peace and unity. You are not inclined to rush through. We spent two hours.

Coventry has a spanking new hotel, where we lunched with a view of the cathedral. It is called the Leofric, named it is said for the husband of the town's traditional heroine, Lady Godiva of the golden hair and the white horse.

RETURNING in late spring afternoon to London, our route took us through the Cotswolds, on back roads lined with hedgerows and stands of cow parsley, through arcades of blossoming chestnut trees and towns where lilacs bloomed in every color from white to red-purple. There were such provocatively named, so English-sounding towns as Leamington Spa, Stowe on the Wold, Moreton on the Marsh (you might stop here for tea at the Manor House, and for a few minutes take in the moss-patched stone-roofed beige cottages with their windowed gables), Ampney Crucis, Ampney St. Peter. You might be tempted to turn off and see what Upper Slaughter and Lower Slaughter look like in this rolling green country with its punctuating, forested depressions (these are wolds), or farther along, looking across to the vale of White Horse, you might like to turn left and investigate the town of Goosey.

Rolling into the Thames Valley, you go through Lechdale, where the river cruises from London come, and Pangborne, and The Swan, a hotel and restaurant right on the weir. You may have such a chance as we had at Fairford to see the traditional English garden fête, where the town turns out to play skittles, bowl on the green, throw darts, play at tug-of-war, drink tea, and eat the cakes that the good ladies of the parish have provided—all for the benefit of the local church, of course. Then on through Henley-on-Thames, where well-heeled Londoners have summer places and the annual regatta is held each June, to Reading (remember Oscar Wilde and the gaol?), a city with the reminiscent look of a prosperous 19th-century town, say, in Ohio. Our last lap to London was over a brand-new highway, bringing us back in time to get an evening theater. Elapsed time, 35 hours. Shows you how diverse a brief excursion out of town can be.

A HOUSE WITH RESTRAINT IN THE VASTNESS OF NATURE

View of hills from near windows at end of living room reveals how, though the actual plot of ground on which the house is built is relatively small, in terms of what one can see, the view is quite extensive in scope.

beneath trees and framed by the silhouette of tree trunks. We all know the way that even an uninteresting landscape takes on a special charm when seen from the encircling enclosure of several trees.

This quality is characteristic of the interior of the house: a view that might have been revealed all at once and with, perhaps, a shattering effect is more tantalizingly presented in delightful and digestible portions. The interior space from which you see these views (which also might have been revealed in only one view) has been, despite its continuous character, revealed in a series of changing vistas framed by the walls and the ceilings.

A portion of the vastness outside, of which the inside is a continuation, has been given intimacy of scale and made humanly habitable through its modeling and shaping by the planes of the floors, walls, and ceiling.

GIVE THE PARTY THEY GAVE IN THE WHITE HOUSE

either the live performance or the recordings.

The winter season lends itself to an occasion of this sort, and refreshments can reflect the spirit of Elizabethan times. Mulled wine (claret, port, and cognac, heated with spices and lemon peel) warms the cockles of the heart no less now than in Queen Bess's day. Lamb's Wool or Gossipe's Cup are as inspiring as whiskey and more imaginative. Recipes for these delicacies appear at the end of the article.

The programming of an Elizabethan evening is a matter of taste. If you have doubts, listen to a selection of the recordings listed at the end of the article and make your choices. The program for the Elizabethan entertainment at the White House included the following poems: "Come Live with Me and Be My Love," by Christopher Marlowe; Shakespeare's "Shall I Compare Thee to a Summer's Day" and "When Daisies Pied and Violets Blue;" "Go and Catch a Falling Star" and "Death Be Not Proud" by John Donne; Robert Herrick's "To Virgins, to Make Much of Time," and Ben Jonson's "Have You Seen but a White Lily Grow?," which was read and also sung as a solo to the accompaniment of a lute, along with "The Battle of Agincourt."

Your taste may run to lighter matters: "Shall I, Wasting in Despair, Die Because a Woman's Fair?" by George Withers; "Love Me Little, Love Me Long," by Marlowe; Campian's "Cherry Ripe" or Herrick's "Whenas in Silk My Julia Goes." If you include one genuinely familiar item, such as Ben Jonson's "Drink to Me Only with Thine Eyes," no guest will feel entirely alien.

For less familiar subject matter, investigate the works of Edmund Spenser, Sir Philip Sidney, Sir Francis Bacon, Richard Hooker, Beaumont & Fletcher, Robert Greene, Sir Walter Raleigh, and Thomas Dekker. Outstanding Elizabethan musicians were Tallis, Byrd, and Dowland. Dowland was noted for his madrigals.

The Elizabethans were a lusty race, and recourse to them as culture for culture's sake is not in keeping. Such an evening should be entered into in the spirit of enjoyment with no academic inhibitions or self-consciousness about raising the tone.

Elizabethans had much in common with 20th-century people. They worked hard and played hard, did not look down on the materialistic glories of silks, satins and velvets, jewelry, and fine needlework. They strove for comfort in their cream-and-peach-colored houses, with mullioned windows, gables, turrets, and chimneys. They coveted rich hangings and soft carpets. They invented and supported a theater that has rarely been equaled. They ate heartily, drank deeply, sang, danced, wrote poetry, and made love. Four hundred years later, their amusements continue to amuse with undiminished vigor. Any effort to entomb them in a stylized entertainment for the purposes of uplift is likely to get out of hand.

Bitter and unpleasant as this wine is, it has a soul, and this is what the cognac producers seek. They capture it through a complicated double-distilling process that conserves the essence of the wine, yet develops a distinctive flavor and aroma. Here, over steadily burning wood fires watched day and night by master distillers, cognac is truly born, falling drop by drop out of the copper still.

To taste this newborn cognac is to put your tongue to fire. It is 70 percent alcohol (140 proof), far higher than is palatable. It is raw, colorless, immature, impossible to drink. But it is a legitimate son of the grape juice and wine before it, with character enough to hint of the mellow brandy to come.

To deliver on its promise, the cognac must mature. The fiery spirit is put away in barrels to age. These cannot be just any barrels. They are hand-hewn, built one at a time out of Limousin oak staves that have themselves aged in the sun for four years.

From the barrels the young cognac gains flavor and a certain amount of color. It also loses, through the pores of the wood, some of its alcohol, since this evaporates faster than water content.

Thus the colorless, fiery liquid that came from the distillery at 70 percent alcohol is changed through the years into a mellow, amber spirit ready for blending. But is old age, then, all-important? No, for a cognac can grow too old in the barrel and, in effect, die. There comes a time when it must be taken from the wood of the cask and put into the glass of a bottle. Then it ages no more.

Here the delicate touch of man is felt again. Each producer has his stores of aging cognac. These are batches that have come to him from the thousands of independent farmers in different years and from different vineyards. From these stores each producer must blend various strengths and flavors to give his various brands a uniform level of quality and taste from year to year. These blends will often contain cognacs that vary in age from five to 45 years. The blending is done so expertly by the master taster that you cannot tell the difference.

Thus, when you buy the same brand of cognac, months or years apart, you can be assured of getting exactly the same flavor, aroma, and strength. While each producer has a different standard to which he hews, each produces that standard uniformly from year to year.

Most of the companies produce cognac at three or four different quality levels—fair, good, better, and best, you might say. Each uses a slightly different designation to indicate their quality levels, but in comparing a company's own products with each other, price is an absolute indicator of quality.

For the uninitiated, some of the symbols and initials used on cognac labels are confusing. Stars are not at all related to years of aging, as some people believe. A three-star cognac is not three years old; more often it is five to eight years old, depending on the firm. And the number of stars cannot be used as a comparison of quality between companies. VSOP (the letters stand, strangely enough, for the English words "Very Superior Old Pale") is usually reserved for higher-quality cognacs. More rarefied designations appear on the finest cognacs—Napoleon, Extra Vieille, Anniversaire, etc.—but these have no absolute meanings either. They are simply the company's own brand name for their best (like "Cadillac"). A few minutes' browsing among cognac shelves of a good liquor store will be an education.

How should you serve cognac? The classic after-dinner cognac—neat, at room temperature, in a medium-size tulip glass—is the way to appreciate it best. In this way the aroma, which is so much a part of its pleasure, can truly be enjoyed. Swirling the cognac in the glass increases the bouquet.

However, with today's trend to lighter drinks, cognac-on-the-rocks and cognac-and-soda (long a popular drink in England) are finding a place in the spectrum of before-and after-dinner drinking. In both these drinks, the flavor comes through, lightened a bit by the ice and/or soda. It would be wasteful (some say a sin) to use a fine old cognac in this way, since the depth of flavor and aroma would be lost; but a three-star quality cognac stands up well to this treatment. Cognac's body makes it a unique addition to many mixed drinks and many fine food recipes, but it is not bred primarily for such purposes.

And so the spirit reaches its proper end. It has come a long way from the grape in the vineyard. The journey is something to consider as we pour cognac from its bottle. Man and nature, geography and history, have combined to bring us this moment of pleasure. If we cannot understand it all, at least we can appreciate it.

THE SOUND OF THE HARP

Interlude in Benjamin Britten's "A Ceremony of Carols," has notable harp music.

You will get keener pleasure from your listening if you know something of the history of the harp and the principles that produce its varied sounds. The harp has accompanied man ever since he discovered music. Wherever there is music there is the harp. It is as basic an instrument as the pipe and the drum. Perhaps—for one can only guess the early history of music—the drum was invented first to make rhythm. Then the reed was blown to make melody. Finally, the hunting bow was plucked to give harmony; and there was the harp.

FROM the harp have descended all stringed instruments from violin to piano. In the process, the harp developed, too. Strings were added, until now the concert harp has 47 strings covering six and a half octaves. The double-action pedals at the base of the instrument—a 19th-century addition—give each string three possible pitches. Forty-seven strings do the work of 141.

Other refinements over its hunting-bow progenitor are: the development of a sound box out of the bow, the adding of a supporting column opposite the sound box, and the development of the gracefully curving neck, the "harmonic curve," to which the strings are attached and tuned.

The harp and the romantic 19th Century were well suited to each other. The most pleasing harp sounds are open, sustained tones that hang hauntingly on the air. No wonder Berlioz, Ravel, and Debussy wrote for this instrument. Modern composers, too, are intrigued with the possibilities of the harp, for it offers a musical potential no other instrument shares. This potential was created by the double-action foot pedal.

The foot-pedals of the harp do not control volume, nor do they sustain or damp the tone. They control the pitch of the strings by shortening them.

The 47 strings of the harp are tuned to the seven steps of the key of C flat major. The lowest string is C flat, the highest a very high G sharp. There are seven foot-pedals, one for each tone or step of the scale (we think of an octave as having eight steps, but just count and you will see that there are only seven steps from C to C). Each foot pedal is attached to the octave strings of one of the seven tones. The pedal for C, for example, controls all the C strings on the harp, the pedal for D, all the D strings, etc. Every string is controlled by a foot pedal. When a pedal is pressed to its halfway mark, the attached harp strings are shortened, raising their pitches by a half-step. When the pedal is pressed all the way, the tones rise another half-step. Accordingly, each of the 47 strings can sound three different pitches.

The implications of this simple but ingenious pedal mechanism are profound. First, any key can be selected quickly and played easily. Transposition from key to close-by key presents few difficulties because fingering is unaffected—the harpist transposes mechanically by pressing a foot-pedal.

Still another effect caused by the double-action pedals is the distinctive pitch difference between D sharp and E flat, between F sharp and G flat, and so on. You can hear the difference clearly. On the piano, D sharp is E flat, F sharp is G flat, etc., thanks to J. S. Bach's "compromised" or tempered keyboard. But the harp maintains the differences. As a result, the sounds of written music are approached much more closely by the harp than by other instruments of the orchestra.

With the harp, as with a poem or a person, one finds that there are limitations that add to its character. When used extensively, the double-action pedals tend to muffle the sound. Greater brilliancy is achieved when music is played in keys with many flats, because such keys require little pedaling. It is possible to play chromatic (semitone) passages only very slowly because of the pedaling involved.

THE harp itself provides no mechanical control of volume. The eight playing fingers (the little fingers are too short) increase or diminish volume and make all tonal effects. Some harpists say thirty distinctive effects are possible. Even the least-trained ear can identify several.

These characteristics, the beauty of its form, the elegant sense of its own antiquity, the classical and romantic music composed for it, create the personality of the harp.

If you are so fascinated by the harp as to consider learning how to play it, or if its lovely shape suggests itself as a decorative accessory you'd like to live with, you should know that a modern-made, playable harp costs from about $3,000 on up, depending upon its size and the elaborateness of the frame. Lyon-Healy, the world's major manufacturers of harps, who have made Chicago the harp capital of the world, have introduced a smaller, five-and-a-half-foot-high harp called "The Troubadour," which is similar in looks and action to the Irish harp without foot pedals, the pitch being controlled by hand levers. This costs about $500. Reconditioned harps are also available, the price usually running about two thirds of the price of their brand-new counterparts.

But you need not buy a harp outright in order to have one under your roof. Pedal harps can be rented by the month, at rentals from $25 to $50, depending on the size and condition. "Troubadours" can be rented at $15. The rental for the first six months can be applied to the purchase price of a harp, should you decide to buy.

Antique harps, charming as they are as objets d'art, are usually not playable because they can rarely stand up to the tensions of restringing, reconditioning, and tuning.

For brochures, prices, and a list of harp music, as well as a listing of harp teachers, write to any of the three Lyon-Healy salons: 243 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.; 6610 Melrose Ave., Los Angeles, Calif.; 109 W. 57th St., N. Y., N. Y.

The following lists suggest records of composed works involving the harp and performances by artists of the harp. We suggest you begin with a selection from the artists' list. Stereo, when available, is indicated in parentheses.

the salt, which is why it is best to have skin facing the heat source for the first stage of the cooking.

No further seasoning is needed, except possibly a few drops of soy sauce sprinkled after the fish is on the eater's plate. This is entirely a personal option. We have found that fish cooked this way is so flavorful that very few people feel the need of the soy.

One way to tell whether you have broiled at just the right speed and heat is this: There will be lines of white, milky foam formed along all the flaky segments of a cut fish.

(You cannot see this in a small, whole fish, though you can tell by the way the flesh breaks into flakes.)

This method is called shio-yaki. Shio means salt. Yaki means broil. Easy, isn't it? And the doing is even easier. Yet the result is spectacular. Even the most particular fish-cooking experts are awed by the shio-yaki method.

Equally easy and just as popular a method is teri-yaki, which literally means "glazed broil." (The glaze is produced by the sauce in which

Why Mrs. Slotin didn't cash in Martha Reinecker's Savings Bonds

During the Korean War, Martha Reinecker signed up for the Payroll Savings Plan. Every month $37.50 was deducted from her pay check and she received a $50 Bond.

A few years later, Martha married Nathaniel Slotin, moved to Skokie, Ill., transferred the Bonds to her husband's safety deposit box and forgot about them.

Just recently, a friend reminded Mrs. Slotin that her Bonds had matured a couple of years ago and that she should cash them in. Well, Mrs. Slotin found out that her Bonds had kept right on growing. Instead of the $50 she had expected, her Bonds were now worth $53, $54, $55 and more, and still earning interest. So after having them reissued in her married name she let them continue to work for her.

A lot of people have learned, as Mrs. Slotin did, that Series E Savings Bonds don't stop growing when they mature. Over $19 billion worth of matured E Bonds are now earning "extra" interest for their owners. These dollars are also helping our country keep strong to stand up for freedom.

Start buying Bonds where you work or bank and see if you don't feel pretty good about it.

Quick facts about U.S. Savings Bonds

- You get $4 for every $3 at maturity
- You get your money anytime fish is marinated before cooking and with which it is basted during cooking.) Teri-yaki cooking is used with a wide variety of fish, such as salmon, mackerel, tuna, flounder, sea bass—plus shell fish, such as lobster and shrimp. (It is also excellent with beef, pork, chicken, duck, and other poultry.)

Here are two variations of teri-yaki sauce. The best one calls for mirin, a sweet wine used only for cooking. It will be hard to get unless you live in a town with some Japanese population. If you cannot get mirin, substitute sugar, as shown below.

Two ways to make teri-yaki sauce

(for 4 servings)

Soy sauce (Japanese type)  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup
Sake (rice wine)  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup
Mirin (sweet cereal wine)  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup

Another way

Soy sauce (Japanese type)  $\frac{1}{3}$  cup
Sake  $\frac{1}{3}$  cup
Sugar 3 T.

Clean fish, and cut off head and bones. (Skinning is optional.) If fish meat is soft, better leave skin on. For small fish like trout and smelt, clean and scale.

Marinate fish in the teri-yaki sauce in a ceramic bowl for 20 minutes. Sauce should almost cover the food.

Oil lightly an aluminum-foil sheet, to prevent fish from sticking to the broil pan. Heat foil under the broiler to about 500 degrees.

Remove fish from the sauce, and broil. In general, fish should be placed at least 8 inches from the fire. In other words, high heat and far from it.

While fish is broiling, put sauce in a small pan and broil until the liquid is reduced 20-30 percent.

When the fish is about 70 percent done (on both sides) baste with the reduced sauce—using about two or three spoonfuls. The baste is best applied with a brush. Watch carefully from here on: the fish must not burn after basting; because the sauce is sweet, this can easily happen. If it is the least bit burned, it has a bitter taste.

When nicely browned, serve hot, placing the individual servings on individual plates. Over each portion pour a tablespoon of the reduced sauce. Garnish with slivered, pickled ginger (called beni-shoga and sold bottled by Japanese grocery stores) or one tablespoon of grated white radish.

Seafood into Salads

One of the best uses of seafoods is to turn them into what might be called the equivalent of our salads—meaning cold, dressed with vinegar dressings, and combined with crispy, raw vegetables, like cucumber, or cooked vegetables, like spinach. These go under the general generic name, in Japan, of "sunomono" (meaning vinegared thing).

Any of the seafoods we eat raw (like oysters and clams) can be put into a Japanese-type salad. Take oysters, for instance. The Japanese would do one little thing we would not do, but it is very worth while. They would open the shell, clean the oysters, then sprinkle salt on them. Then the oysters would go into a bamboo basket (call it a sieve) to be washed in cold water while shaking the sieve. Then the Japanese would sprinkle the oysters with grated white radish—about 3 tablespoons per serving—and mix, stirring gently. (You would be surprised how soon the radish gets dark and dirty-looking.) Then they would wash away the radish and the dirtiness. Do this, and after draining, you will never have eaten such oysters—particularly if they are dressed with either of these sauces. (Abalone and clams are also good with these dressings.)

Two Vinegar Dressings

(for 1 person)

Pon-zu

Lime juice	1 T.
Soy sauce	1 T.
Mirin or sweet sauterne	1 t.

Vinegar (Japanese rice vinegar)	1 T.
Sugar	1 t.
Salt	$\frac{1}{8}$ t.
Soy sauce	$\frac{1}{2}$ t.

For white-meat fish (flounder, porgy, smelt, sea bass, striped bass, and red snapper) clean and cut off head and take out bones. Skin. Sprinkle salt on the both sides of fish and let stand for two hours.

Quickly wash off salt in cold water and marinate fish in rice vinegar for 20 minutes. Vinegar has to cover fish. After 20 minutes, the surface turns white.

Remove from vinegar and cut into bite-size pieces. Dress with sanbai-zu or ginger vinegar.

Ginger Vinegar

Rice vinegar	1 T.
Soy sauce	1 T.
Mirin or sweet sauterne	1 t.
Fresh ginger juice	½ t.

For mackerel and sardine, clean and cut head and bones out, leaving skin. Salt and marinate above. Dress with sanbai-zu or

Egg Yolk Vinegar

Rice vinegar	1 T.
Egg yolk	⅓
Sugar	1 t.
Salt	¼ t.

Mix all ingredients, then heat in a double boiler, stirring to a smooth paste. Cool.

How to skewer fish for a "swimming-upstream" look*1 ▶

Hold fish so head points to you. Insert a thin, long metal skewer at edge of the eye and push toward backbone, but not clear through. Bend the fish by applying pressure with the skewer and folding with the hand that is free. Point should come out ¼ of the length from the top.

Re-insert skewer one-inch from previous opening. Force it out again at a point that is three-quarters of the total length. Slide fish to center of skewer.

3 ▶

The fish assumes the look of swimming. The side that has been pierced should be served away from the eater, to reveal only a natural appearance.

◀ 4

For easier turning during broiling, connect two fish with a third skewer squeezed between the skin and the other skewers. Salt tails and fins generously. Place in deep broiling pan with skewers resting on front and rear edges of pan, thus keeping fish from touching anything and retaining its shape.

For crab meat, boil crab and take flesh out of shell or use canned or frozen king crab. Tear it into bite-size pieces. Take out soft bones. Dress with sanbai-zu and garnish with grated fresh ginger or grated lime skin (green part only).

Vegetables to go with fish or shellfish

Usually vegetables, cooked or raw, are served with fish or shellfish in the same bowl.

1. Spinach (boiled and drained).
2. Cucumber (sliced paper-thin, sprinkled with salt, allowed to sit 20 minutes, then squeezed dry). Garnish with slivered benishoga (pickled ginger).

The underplanting here is ground phlox (P. subulata) that will continue to cover the ground and brighten the scene long after the bold show of tulips has gone. The seasonal display of the taller bulbs is also enhanced when combined with an attractive spread of low-growing flowers.

Best ground covers to use with bulbs

By ELSIE LOUISE SCULTHORP

• Unless you are one of those who love the sight of brown earth at all times, a pleasant finishing touch can be given to the garden, and especially to bulb plantings, by low-growing ground covers, preferably the evergreen perennials.

This sort of background is best suited for those bulbs, both large and small, that can be left in the ground for years without being lifted and divided. This gives the ground cover time to make a solid background. Such ground covers are especially valuable for plantings of the very early small bulbs, such as snowdrops, scillas, chionodoxa, crocus and the like, that appear through the cold, wet earth when there is little greenery to set them off and make their miniature display more important and interesting. Some of these early bulbs have very little foliage of their own and need this background.

There are many low-growing perennial ground covers that will stay colorful all winter and be ready in the spring to back up the little bulbs. In addition to furnishing a soft and colorful background for the bulb planting, many of these ground covers give us the dividend of their own flowers.

An area of evergreen ground cover, be it in panels beside the front walk with flowering trees or any space not used for other flower planting, will always be handsome by itself, and even more interesting and beautiful when the bulbs, both large and small, come up through it in the spring. And when the bulb foliage ripens and turns yellow, it can be tucked under the ground cover, particularly if the underplanting is the size of vinca or ivy. The bulbs will come up through most ground covers quite easily. Of course, you should choose your planting with some care: you can't expect tiny bulbs to grow well through a thick, dense mat of ground cover. This is particularly true of ivy; if you're using it, try to get some of the charming small-leaved varieties. Robust English ivy, which will take over an area and climb everything within reach, is too invasive for our purpose. Its leaves get too large, and before you know it the stems are as big around as your finger, and hard to control.

Many small, low-growing ground covers will solve the problem. Myrtle (Vinca minor) is one of the most used of all evergreen ground covers; it thrives in shade, in sun, in practically any soil. Its runners take root as they creep along, and it grows fairly rapidly, so there is soon a good mat of rich, green, cleanly cut, small-leaved foliage, hardy and long-lived. The one we usually see has blue flowers; the flowers of Bowles variety are larger and bluer than the common sort. There is also a kind with white flowers. This is a very old plant, having been used in Roman gardens.

MOTHER-of-Thyme (Thymus serpyllum) is one of the best of the low-growing ground covers for early spring bulbs. It is really low, being practically prostrate on the ground. It loves sun. The color of the foliage of many species of thyme remains practically unchanged throughout the year. The thymes have one fault: a desire to cover the earth by runners and by seed, unchecked by rain or by drought. But they are not difficult to control, and are so useful that this one sin may be forgiven them. In addition, the thymes bear tiny flowers in profusion, in many colors—white, lilac, rosy-red.

Thymus serpyllum albus stays pale green all year round, and would be charming and effective as a background for any of the small spring bulbs, such as snowdrops and tiny yellow daffodils. These would also show up delightfully against Thymus serpyllum, var. lanuginosus, the woolly thyme.

The dwarf evergreen veronicas, which like sun, too, are also appealing as a spring ground cover. The narrow evergreen leaves resemble iberis; the flowers are usually drooping clusters of deep blue, pale blue, white, or rose. Several interesting kinds are:

Veronica repens, a prostrate, slender, compact plant grows in dense masses, with leaves shining green and mosslike, flowers of rose, or nearly white with a touch of blue.

Comb speedwell (Veronica pectinata) is prostrate, white, pubescent, spreading, with many flowers of deep blue with a white center. It grows anywhere. Variety rosea has small spikes of rosy flowers.

Common speedwell (Veronica officinalis) is a prostrate, leafy, native evergreen with many-flowered racemes of pale blue, occasionally pink. It holds a good green all through the winter and practically never winter-kills.

Veronica saxatilis, is a low-growing perennial with tiny leaves, and blue, pale pink, or white flowers in short racemes.

Any of the small veronicas are worth trying and would make lovely color combinations with small daffodils or other miniature bulbs.

Ground pink or moss pink (Phlox subulata) makes a good green carpet in winter. The sharp and prickly foliage has an interesting and unusual texture. Later it bears a solid mat of flowers in a wonderful range of colors—blues, pinks, rose, reds, lavender-blue, purples and white—that completely hides the foliage. It is one of the most satisfactory low-growing plants. The habit is neat and it grows cheerfully in the sun in any kind of soil. It is a much prized and very old garden plant.

Pinks (Dianthus) are a group of very attractive perennials with grasslike leaves. There are many low-growing kinds. The flowers of some have a delightful fragrance. This old-fashioned and much loved plant likes warm, sunny spots.

Dianthus deltoides is about 6" high, of creeping habit, and one of the prettiest border pinks. It makes neat mats of foliage and bears many little fragrant rosy-colored or white flowers. The foliage is apt to be slightly yellow at the end of the winter, but it recovers rapidly.

Cheddar pink (Dianthus gratianopolitanus) makes wonderful small mounds of blue-green foliage that holds its color all through the year. Bulbs should be planted between the clumps, so the bulb stems will not spoil the beauty of the foliage clumps by pushing through them.

SEVERAL of the smaller sedums are distinctly useful as spring ground covers. They grow easily nearly anywhere.

Sedum acre, one of the best known of the small sedums, is so easily grown that it can become a nuisance. The dense mats of foliage are bright yellow-green, and they offer no resistance whatever to the tiniest bulbs. Later the foliage mat is sprinkled with tiny golden stars. There's also a white-flowered form. There are many other ground-cover sedums, of varying heights and the flowers usually of white, yellow, or rose, rarely red or blue. Sedum acre is "everybody's plant," and you might try it—but don't let it get away from you.

Moneywort (Lysimachia nummularia) might also be tried as a background for small bulbs. It is a very useful old-fashioned plant for carpeting the ground, making big, nearly flat mats of paired, round leaves. In May it bears many large (1½ to ¾") round, yellow flowers. It likes good soil and moisture; otherwise it may die away (Please turn the page) in dry seasons. It will be a nuisance and a weed if allowed to get into the lawn.

Ajuga reptans is a low, dense, fast-spreading creeper, with oblong, dark-green leaves. A. rubra has dark-green leaves with a distinctly purplish cast. Increases by many short runners that cover the soil in a cushion 2-3" deep. In spring there are short, dense spikes of whorled, tubular flowers, in white, blue, or pink. Use it with larger bulbs such as crocus. It is too dense to use with miniatures.

Pachysandra terminalis is a sturdy-spreading evergreen ground cover that grows 6 to 10-inches tall. Use it under large bulbs, such as standard daffodils and tulips. It grows best in shade, but will take some sun.

Snow in summer (Cerastium tomentosum) is a handsome, creeping perennial with grayish, woolly leaves and white flowers in early summer. It is a fine background for brightly colored tulips.

Arenaria verna makes a flat carpet of green foliage, 3 inches high, with white flowers on thin stems. Grows well in full sun.

If you grow bulbs in a partially shaded woody spot, either partridgeberry or bunchberry is a delightful background plant. Partridgeberry (Mitchella repens) has trailing, woody stems with small dark-green leaves, small white flowers, and red berries. Bunchberry (Cornus canadensis) has whorls of 3-inch leaves, showy, dogwoodlike "flowers," and bright red berries, but it grows only 6 to 9 inches tall.

A small planting of bulbs can count for a lot when supported by a ground cover as handsome as the gray snow-in-summer (Cerastium tomentosum) shown here.

HOW TO SELECT TULIPS

with irregularity in their spacings and locations. For optimum display it takes hundreds, not dozens, of bulbs.

Some classes of tulips are long-stemmed. Their height and their resulting dignity and stateliness give them dominating quality. Class-related facts about tulips like these tell us something about how we can put each variety to its best use. Classification is based upon flower form, habit of growth, and time of flowering, as can be seen when you look at the accompanying table.

You should never select tulips from just one class, such as, let us say, the Darwins. For one thing, this would give a very short season of bloom (about ten days to two weeks). It is more interesting to have them in flower over a longer period. The full range of bloom is from late March until late May in the latitude of New York City—if you plant early, midseason, and late types.

In general, early-season tulips are shorter, while late season ones are taller. You can select blossom types from a wide range. And the color range of almost every class has certain distinctive features.

Landscaping pointers

In enhancing your landscape with tulips, you should remember that the short-stemmed tulips are viewed from above. For this reason, they are especially suited for staging showy spreads of color.

Much of the attraction to tulips lies in the beautiful form of their flowers. Anything that helps to show off their form is to be desired. A good background and good underplanting are the keys.

Tulips can be viewed from all directions. They have no directional face, as do many flowers (except for the parrots, with their twisting stems). It is best to plant in clusters of six to eighteen bulbs, placed to provide strong focal points of color. Only one color and one variety should be planted to each drift.

Russell Page, able and famous British landscape architect, likes harmonious but quietly contrasting color in his tulip plantings. Scarlet and yellow clash, he finds, unless he uses an intermediate orange. White and pale yellow combine well and represent a simple but gay combination. White is good, he feels, for lining or separating colors. A favorite combination of his is to let white and purple-black tulips (like Queen of the Night) grow through a low-growing ground cover of white violas, white Phlox drummondii, or very dark-blue forget-me-nots.

In each planting, uniformity in every sense of the word is essential for the most beautiful tulip display. You might use varieties of one class or of closely related classes and varieties of the same height in each planted area. To insure uniformity of height, all of your bulbs must be planted to the same depth. Only the first year after planting can you expect simultaneous flowering in any given variety.

In succeeding years the flowering is less precise. This is one reason why some gardeners plant new bulbs each year.

Many varieties of tulips are long-lived, especially if planted rather deep, some surviving for as long as 20 years. But most last for perhaps three, five, or ten years. If you are willing to forego simultaneous bloom, your tulips will continue for a number of years. You should then use naturalistic plantings.

Climatizing

More tulips are being grown in the deep South. For successful growth in that area, one should purchase precooled bulbs that have been kept under cool storage. Darwin tulips take about a six-week cooling period at 40° F. Some gardeners buy regular tulips and put them in the refrigerator for four to six weeks. This is not likely to prove as successful as commercial precooling because the temperature and humidity of the refrigerator is less likely to be at the proper level. Precooled bulbs should be planted about mid-December. Bulbs so treated are available at some garden-supply dealers' and by mail.

Planting and care

Tulips like a sunny location. If grown in partial or heavy shade, their stems will be weak and will tend to bend toward the sunlight. This spoils their appearance. They should do well, however, if they are in shade for a part of each day and in full sun for the rest. If strong springtime winds are prevalent, your tulips may be planted on the sheltered lee side of a dense planting like a hedge.

So long as the soil is well-drained, tulips will do reasonably well in soil of almost any type. But the ideal soil for them is a light, fertile, well-drained loam. Their planting beds should be cultivated to a depth of one foot. Just prior to planting and each fall thereafter, 5 pounds of a 5-10-10 commercial fertilizer may be applied to each 100 square feet of planting area. In the early spring, a pound of high nitrogen material, like ammonium sulphate, may be scattered over each 100 square feet of planted area.

Your bulbs should be set in the soil to a depth of from 5 to 10 inches, measuring from their upper tips. They should be planted at the more shallow depths if they are to be lifted and stored during the summer. The small-sized tulip bulbs should be planted at the more shallow depths. Whenever tulips are treated as annuals and new bulbs are planted yearly, they need not be planted deeply. But any bulbs that are to remain in the ground year after year should be planted deeply to about 10 inches. Bulbs should be planted to this depth only in well-drained soil. Lacking good drainage, bulbs may decay at the greater depths. In each planting, it should be remembered that several inches of good soil should be beneath the bulb.

Perhaps most Northern gardeners plant their tulips in late October and November. Such late planting is good, but in areas where the ground stays frozen all winter and freezes at an early date, they must be planted before it freezes. If bulbs are planted too early in fall, the warmth of the soil will induce premature root growth. Tulips have been planted

How to succeed in gardening without really trying*

Borrow that armful of "how to" garden books if you must. But you won't have to read them. Buy those expensive garden tools if you have the urge. But you really won't need them. Because the secret of how to succeed in gardening lies in bulbs that bring forth lovely blossoms in their season. And with minimum effort. Here's how. Dig a little hole. Drop in a daffodil, tulip, hyacinth or crocus bulb, right side up. Cover it. Water it. Walk away. That—and three little words—are all you need. The words? Plant Dutch bulbs. It's your guarantee of a world of beauty at your doorstep, come Spring. Be sure the bulbs say "Imported from Holland." ## HOW TO SELECT TULIPS in the vicinity of New York City as late as mid-January. Except for having shorter stems, they appear to be normal.

Species tulips, which grow into small plants, may be spaced 4 to 5 inches apart and the large sorts, 6 inches, but if the latter are being interplanted with bedding plants, they should be spaced from 10 to 12 inches apart. In Northern areas, after you plant your bulbs and cold winter weather sets in, their bed may be covered with salt hay, evergreen branches, compost, peat moss, or other protective materials. When the bulbs start their spring growth, the ground should be uncovered if hay or branches were used as covering.

Foliage dieback

As your tulip flowers fade, you should cut them from their stems and discard them. Once their flowering is complete, their foliage will remain green for a time and then yellow and die. If you treat your tulips as annuals, you might as well cut and discard all foliage as soon as your bulbs' flowering is finished. But if you want them to rebloom in subsequent years, their foliage must not be cut until it has yellowed, withered, and died naturally. For during the dieback interval the bulbs store food preparatory to dormancy and next spring's flowering. There should be no interference with this process although the yellowing, withering foliage may present an unattractive appearance.

Some gardeners lift their tulip plants after their bloom is completed and set them out in a less prominent place while their foliage dies. This is a laborious task and constitutes lost motion. If you interplant or underplant your tulips with annuals or perennials, the tulips' foliage may be partially hidden.

Low maintenance

While considerable work must be expended with tulips, particularly in the preparation of their beds and in planting, they demand no more care than many other flowering plants. In the interest of low maintenance, we might suggest that you garden intensively within the areas that you devote to your tulips but confine them to a few relatively small areas, perhaps only one or two. These should be in view from your terrace, patio or windows.

Also, let us suggest that in fall you plant some tulips in pots and planters for decorative bloom on your patio or terraces. You may also want some to bring indoors.

Henredon Custom Folio One

There's a quality about a home with Henredon. It may be an apartment, a town house, a country home. But the Henredon furniture in it reveals a very selective taste. You see, every piece of Henredon furniture has the look of custom-design. And is made with custom care. Yet the prices are so practical that many young couples start off with Henredon. And many of today's beautifully decorated homes began with one piece of Henredon as a wedding or as a Christmas gift. On these pages Henredon introduces a brilliant new furniture group . . . Custom Folio One. Its inspiration is derived from the late 18th Century, the "Golden Age" of French decorative art. With this group you can express your own individual taste in decorating more freely than ever before. Because the designs and exquisitely carved motifs are so perfectly harmonized that you can combine any pieces that you please—they don't have to match! That's true of the finishes, too. They are charmingly informal—soft, mellow Provincial Fruitwood and silvery grey Azur Antique. Many pieces come in either of these finishes, some in combinations of the two. You see here a few examples of Custom Folio One. You can see many more in fine stores now.

Automatic Blanket by Fieldcrest

Young ladies appreciate their dreamland comfort, too. And the best comforter yet invented, next to mother's loving arms, is an automatic electric blanket...by Fieldcrest. It assures gentle, seemingly weightless warmth, in spite of Jack Frost's 'icy fingers'. When members of your family are old enough to think for themselves, they're old enough to enjoy this magical way to sleep. You will, too.

For today's new world of decorating— a handsome new floor from Armstrong

It's a vinyl floor.

It has intriguing character.

It's pebbly—made of vinyl chips set in translucent vinyl.

It has a gentle, rippling texture.

It has depth you can look down into.

It's called Montana Corlon.

Today, interior designers insist on the importance of the floor. It should make a distinctive contribution to the room.

Armstrong Montana Vinyl Corlon does just that. It's been created expressly to enhance both modern and traditional furnishings and architectural details.

Montina is made of random-sized chips of vinyl. They have flecks of color in them—light flecks, dark flecks, golden flecks.

The chips are suspended in translucent vinyl—giving Montana its pebbly texture and its depth. You can feel the texture. You can look down between the chips. They "float" in the vinyl base—an effect that's enhanced by the lustrous, satiny finish. (On the practical side, these Montana qualities help conceal scuff marks and dents from pointed heels.)

Because Montana Corlon comes in long, wide rolls, this new vinyl floor is almost seamless. You can create all sorts of custom floor designs with Montana, too. And it will go in any part of the home—even in most downstairs playrooms, directly over the concrete.

Send for a free sample of Montana Corlon and a folder showing its many decorator colorings. Armstrong, 6311 Atkins Ave., Lancaster, Pa. In Canada, Dept. 113-H, Box 919, Montreal, P. Q.

How to keep warm without storm sash... Thermopane® insulating glass

For winter comfort, there's nothing more satisfying than Thermopane insulating glass. You enjoy the beauty of big windows, yet Thermopane's air space insulates you from the chill of winter. And it helps reduce heating bills. How satisfying, too, to know that with Thermopane you never have to buy or bother with storm sash.

Expensive? Thermopane costs a little more initially, but not in the long run. Not when you add up the extras in comfort and fuel savings. Your builder can include the cost of Thermopane in your mortgage, adding little to your monthly payments. For full details on Thermopane and its use in all kinds of windows, send 10¢ for our booklet. Write L·O·F, 31113 Libbey·Owens·Ford Building, Toledo, Ohio 43624.

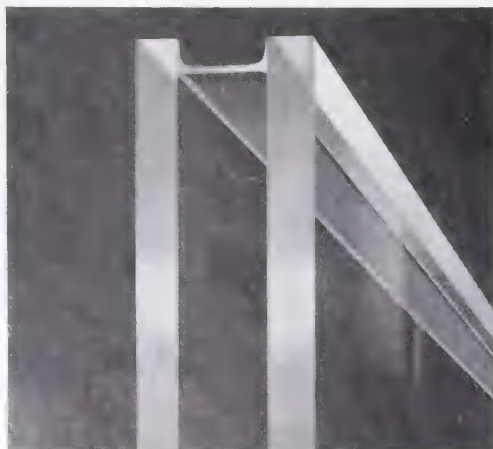

MADE IN U.S.A.

THE QUALITY MARK TO LOOK FOR

It's marked for your protection. Look for the Thermopane trademark etched in the corner of the insulating glass you buy. It's the sign of the original insulating glass developed by Libbey·Owens·Ford 25 years ago.

It's comfort built in . . . thanks to a vapor-tight seal. Only Thermopane insulating glass has the Bondermetic Seal® that fuses metal to glass. Thermopane also is available in smaller sizes with glass-to-glass seal.

When you build or buy ...look for Thermopane

It's a sign of extra comfort and extra value in your home. Be sure to get the heat saving and convenience of having Thermopane insulating glass in every window.

Thermopane is available from L·O·F glass distributors and dealers. It is also used by manufacturers of all types of quality windows, as well as sliding glass doors.

For the name of glass or window distributors or dealers in your community, see the Yellow Pages of your phone book.

A pretty face can fool you in carpets, too.

A carpet ought to have a pretty face. You're going to be looking at it for a good long time. If you don't fall in love with it, don't buy it.

And if you do fall in love with it, make sure it'll be faithful over the years. (After all, it costs a pretty penny.)

Are the yarns great yarns that'll weather the living? Or inferior yarns that just a few years will erode away?

Are the dyes good dyes, tested and true? Resistant to sunlight and cleaning? Or unstable dyes that won't hold their color as long?

Does it have a good strong back that'll keep it firm and young? Or a weak back that'll let it wrinkle, or stretch, or distort?

Has it been watched over, checked from the time it was a mere fluff of yarn until the day it comes into your home?

There's only one way to tell.

Find out if the carpet has a good name.

Lees.

Lees uses the best kinds of yarns, the tried and true dyes, durable backs (tightly bonded with latex), and an inspection system that starts back with the fiber or yarn, and never ends until the carpet is ready to ship.

When a carpet's been through our mill and passed, we print our name on the back, along with a number. Registering another first-quality carpet by Lees.

That's our promise that a Lees carpet won't fall flat on its pretty face.

For a lot of good, down-to-earth reasons, "those heavenly carpets by Lees."

Write us. We'll tell you where to find them.

Do the English alone know the secret of whiteness?

It's not truly a secret. It's merely a difficult technical process. The English excel at it. Pure, snowy whiteness of background is one of the characteristics of fine English bone china. So is delicate translucency and, surprisingly enough, great durability and strength. You'll find these qualities in every Royal Doulton Bone China pattern.

You'll also find exquisite decorative detail in gold, in platinum, in floral designs . . . and dozens of variations of each. Send for our 28-page full-color brochure of patterns in bone china. JEFF RAMSEY, FAMOUS AMERICAN BULLFIGHTER, WATCHES HIS "PUPIL" IN THE WORLD'S LARGEST BULL RING—MEXICO CITY'S 50,000 SEAT PLAZA MEXICO.

The plaza was never so plush...

Not until this aficionado arrived for a practice session in the plaza de toros. It was pure luxury in the afternoon... with a thick-pile Barwick underfoot and E.T.B. making passes with a flaming carpet cape. You'd think such elegantly textured all-Nylon carpet would cost mucho pesos. Not so. Any torero knows a man's linen handkerchief usually costs more per square yard than most fine Barwick carpets.* So Olé... for Barwick carpets!

Barwick fashions NYLON — ACRILAN — HERCULON (the longest wearing carpet fibers known) into luxurious carpets of radiant, enduring colors. From $7.95 to $24.95 per square yard at better stores everywhere.

*Four make a square yard.
4 x 2.50 = $10.00

Where is Acadian County?

Where did it come from? From long, long ago, when French settlers added their beloved curves and swirls to the sturdy furniture they crafted for their new American homes. Where can you find Acadian County? Look for style that is graceful and proud, warmed by a mellow Doesheen finish. Look for a tasteful tracery of brass that accents a drawer or door. Look for all of these as your decorating triumph over problem-sized rooms, and you've found Acadian County.

Are you thirsty for news...or drowning in it?

In either case, your
THE NATIONAL OBSERVER
Find out for only $2.67

Some people aren't getting enough news these days. They're foggy on what's really going on in Katanga or Cape Canaveral, Birmingham or Broadway. Others feel they're getting too much — drowning in crime and crisis.

You can even suffer from both complaints at the same time! You can be deluged with divorces, robberies, feuds, and frauds, and still feel woefully ignorant about the Common Market, "Pop Art," and hydrofoil ships.

In any case, we think your whole family will find wholesome relief in the pages of The National Observer.

Here at last is a national weekly newspaper that tells you — quickly, clearly, quietly, without bias, sensationalism, or scare headlines — the truth about what's going on in national and world affairs, the arts and sciences, books, entertainment, sports, education. You learn so many things you wouldn't otherwise know. Such as:

How New Hampshire feels about a Rockefeller-Goldwater primary fight.

Why many South Americans hate gringos.

The sedative that turns brunettes into blondes.

Towers of junk — a folk-art fairyland. Are parochial school graduates more religious than public school graduates? New survey seeks answer.

"Chicago" Bridge — new rules pep up game.

How witch doctor "psychiatrists" get results.

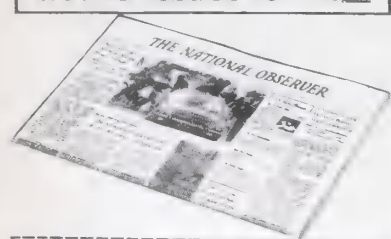

How to choose a stock broker. Secret hopes and fears of East Germans. The phone of the future.

He defended Eichmann — now he suffers. Why Cuban exiles are more hopeful.

In only 18 to 32 full-size newspaper pages you get more reading. And not just one major "cover story," but 5 or 6. Over 50 sparkling photos. Columns on bridge, health and cooking.

Try it! Send no money—just mail coupon.

DECORATOR'S DIARY

Some new entries in the home-furnishing market and some case histories of problems they helped a decorator solve —and which may help you

It's an international epidemic. this sehnsucht for the lighting fixtures of the fairly recent past, like post lamps, carriage lamps, and street lights that used to illuminate the cobbled streets when our grandparents went surrey-riding. The collectors are as avid in England and France as they are in our country, and such points of connoisseurship have been reached as you wouldn't believe.

My client, Mrs. Ormsby, who enjoys a certain status in her neighborhood for being the first with the most, has done much to educate me in this refined matter. The old street lamp which now lights her Westchester driveway is none of your common, ordinary U.S. variety.

"It's Old Chelsea," she told me rather superbly the day it arrived in its impressive cratings, meaning that it's a relic of London's Chelsea district, and about as chic as you can get in street-lamp-collecting circles. Chelsea lamps are limited, and to latch on to one outside of Chelsea is rather a feat, since only the inhabitants of that area are privileged to buy them, and their price has gone up like a rocket.

By what machinations she managed to acquire hers, I wouldn't know, but I do know that if it hadn't been for me she'd have done better to leave it in its native Albion. For, once it had been properly wired and installed, instead of giving out with that quaint old-time glow she'd been counting on, the lamp blazed forth with the fierceness of a spotlight in a penitentiary. Neighbors complained of the glare, dogs barked, and strangers drove up to the house thinking they'd found a new restaurant. Mrs. O's status was faltering.

Her electrician, who's noted for his unsympathetic attitude toward any fixtures he himself does not sell, said, "As long as you want it to look like gaslight, why not try gas?" and washed his hands of it. But Mr. Ormsby, who felt that this recherché investment had already gone too far, said gas lines would be installed over his dead body.

As a last resort, Mrs. Ormsby called me. "Short of using candles, what shall I do now?" she asked.

"You might try changing the light bulbs," I advised her, as I'd advise any quaint-lantern owner who wants to light her quaint old lanterns with appropriate mellowness. "Get in a supply of those old-fashioned carbon filament incandescent lamps, like Mr. Edison used to make—those tapering, clear glass ones with the little point on top. They're as close as you can come, electrically speaking, to the soft flame of gas or candlelight, and a perfect duplication of what electricity looked like in its earliest days. They are each about 60 kilowatts—16 candlepower, as they used to say in 1888—and are great for outdoor use because they look so pretty in the darkness and aren't affected by the weather. You can buy them by mail—two for $4—from the people who have revived the manufacture of them, America Tubilee Co., Toledo 10, Ohio."

"It's stunning!" said Midge Daniels when she saw her new living room for the first time since I had climbed into her grandmother's wasp-stung attic and uncovered the cache of Canton ware which inspired the color scheme.

According to family legend, the precious blue-and-white china had toured the world in her great-great-grandfather's sailing vessel before it arrived in Portsmouth and became his household's traditional Thanksgiving table setting.

I wonder what that old seafarer would have said had he known that 200 years later the remnants of his oriental cargo would be the major decoration of a Manhattan apartment living room, each piece displayed on its own bracketed little Lucite shelf against a butter-yellow wall. And I wonder what unprintable words he might have used to describe anyone who would choose a blue-and-white cotton calico print to cover his two Queen Anne wing chairs and a Federal sofa.

His strong-jawed portrait hangs over that same sofa, and looks down with some disdain, it seems to me, on the yellow 501 nylon carpeting that covers the floor wall to wall. He'd have preferred an oriental rug, I imagine—one he had personally bargained for in the souks of Samarkand. He'd have approved the white leather chairs that group around the circular white dining table in front of the Canton ware display. What he'd have thought of the white Formica tops on the dining and coffee tables, I couldn't guess. But I'd bet a million he'd have given his eye teeth to have collected two of the most charming pieces in the room.

They are, of all things, table lighters, and they are so like the old captain's Canton-ware collection in color and quality that they might have come out of the same kiln. But wherever they came from, they are rarities and a couple of the most enchanting conversation provokers any room could have.

One is a Chinese cricket cage, a pierced and elegant hexagon of china, originally made, one imagines, so that a mandarin might carry his luck-bringing cricket with him wherever he went. The other is a china bird-feeder, and one wonders what fine feathered creature once nibbled millet out of its hollow oval cup. Both have been given pretty collars of hand-rubbed plated gold and have been inset with Evans lighter units.

I can't take credit for the idea, but I do think I was smart to go down to Altman's when I began looking for unusual accessories. Because down there I found these two prize pieces in Canton ware among their full selection of the provocative goods turned out by Madeleine Creations and Antiques.

This firm makes a specialty of converting odd and lovely bits of crystal, porcelain, and metal into table lighters, thus turning a practicality into an objet d'art. The makings might be a Bohemian overlay glass perfume bottle, a Black Basalt Wedgwood jar, a cloisonné bowl, a Satsuma vase. They scout the antique marts for likely convertibles. Like the cricket cage and bird feeder, the antiques are of necessity one of a kind or at best limited in quantity. But the firm has also a regular line of lighters with bases of such fine modern-made materials as Waterford and Val St. Lambert crystal, and Limoges china.—M. G.

Hard to find even when you know what you're looking for, the Scilly Isles lie about 30 miles southwest of Land's End, the southwest tip of England. They would be cold, unpleasant places without the warmth of the Gulf Stream.

England's own South Sea Islands

Believe it or not, only thirty miles off the wind-driven coast of Cornwall are subtropical isles—the Scilly Islands. History and horticulture make them a rare travel find

By MITCHELL GOODMAN

• The Englishman, his flowers, his garden—they belong together, they are familiar facts. But who ever heard of the Englishman whose very life and living is flowers, whose whole world is a garden, an island garden of year-long bloom set in a sea so transparently blue, a climate so continuously mild that it might well be in the Mediterranean. Where in the world of England do palms, mimosa, eucalyptus, daffodils and a thousand other flora grow side by side in the open—even in midwinter? Where does the island- and flower-loving Englishman go when he wants the peace and simplicity, the human scale and complete naturalness of islands so small that they look and feel at every moment like islands, and yet are large enough and numerous enough to offer considerable variety of life and landscape, flora and fauna, and easygoing things to do?

Who, in fact, but the Englishman ever heard of the Isles of Scilly?

So unlikely as to seem legendary, this toylike archipelago is as real and enchanting as the hundred million early flowers it yearly sends up to mainland market places. Daffodil and narcissus predominate, but to rest the soil and lengthen the season Brompton stocks, anemones, violets, iris, ixias and freesias are also grown. The Scillies lie, fittingly enough, beyond the sea-beaten furthest reaches of Cornwall, 28 miles southwest of Land's End in what would be the cold Atlantic were it not for the magical effects of the Gulf Stream. The people of the Isles—a fortunate handful of seafolk turned to flower farming, whose hybrid character strongly reflects this mixture—have lived here since the beginning of time, fishing and boat-building, trading with Phoenicians and Romans, giving sanctuary to princes and Christian hermits, exposed to marauders, pirates, Viking raiders, and Atlantic gales. Today, ninety

Is this the top-secret weekend lodge of a hard-working advisor to the President, the hidden hideaway of a Chairman of the Board? Not at all. This is actually a perfectly possible, completely practical home away from home. It could easily, with variations, be yours. It was designed to create an atmosphere that gives the maximum of ease and comfort with the minimum of work and care. How so? All the colors are rich, soothing and relaxing. What's practical, you ask, about white dining cushions or beige easy chairs. The answer—U.S. NAUGAHYDE® vinyl, the world's most luxurious, most carefree upholstery. All it needs is the swish of a soapy sponge to make it the cleanest furniture in the house. Let them put their feet up—and if the fireplace is damp and smoulders—no harm! Imagine the pleasure of owning upholstered furniture that always looks its best, that's as easy to keep clean as a cup and saucer.

Best of all, you can translate all these advantages into your home, into the very room you're sitting in now. With Naugahyde upholstery you can eliminate a lot of year-round housework, add wonderful color, texture and beauty to all your upholstered furniture. MISS BARBARA DORN, A.I.D., of New York, who designed this enviable vacation home, says, "I think we should live with as much comfort and beauty as possible—as much of the time as possible. I chose Naugahyde for all the upholstered pieces because it provides a wonderful combination of luxury and rich color with the minimum of care. Naugahyde, with its infinite variety of patterns and textures, lends itself to every period and style of furniture design. It's perfectly suited to today's more casual way of living."

Whether your taste is Regency, Danish modern, or a happy combination of both, you will find a pattern, a color in Naugahyde that is exactly what you're looking for. And for rich, soft fabriclike texture, be sure you look at U.S. NAUGAWEAVE®, the breathable vinyl upholstery. There are, in all, more than 500 different patterns, colors and textures to choose from. People are always discovering new uses for Naugahyde. It makes a superb wall or counter-top covering. It's been made into handsome draperies, bedspreads and table covers. You yourself will probably invent some new use for it.

Beauty and practicality considered, what about comfort? Home means comfort and comfort means Koylon...U.S. KOYLON® genuine latex foam rubber, the world's most luxurious, most durable cushioning. It is, quite simply, the best money can buy, and at its best with Naugahyde.

Did you ever stop to think how really dramatic a white sofa would be—or a tangy lemon-yellow chair and ottoman. Not practical, you say? Completely—when it's Naugahyde. Now...look around your living room, and let your imagination run riot.

ENGLAND'S OWN SOUTH SEA ISLANDS

percent of these Scillonians spend the best part of their lives among the daffodils and narcissi that are their principle product and sole export. For centuries these have been known as the Fortunate Isles. Never was the description more apt than it is today, as much for the visitor as for the native.

THERE are five inhabited islands in the group—St. Mary's, Treco, St. Agnes, Bryher and St. Martin's—and about two thousand people, four-fifths of whom live on St. Mary's. The Scillonians relish their isolation and their uncomplicated life, and are perfectly willing to share these blessings with the traveler (especially the off-season variety) who will forego bright lights and "sights" for the deeper satisfactions of unspoiled sea, rock, moorland, sky, beach, birds—and flowers. The islands are very small, so small that they are usually measured not in miles but in acres. In summer they are full of English visitors; overdevelopment is a still-distant threat of which, luckily, the islanders are wary. St. Mary's, the largest, has 1,611 acres and is two miles across at its widest; it is the only place where cars and real roads (nine miles of them) are found. For the rest, there are only pony carts, country roads, footpaths, and the omnipresent inter-island launch.

The archipelago is a continent in miniature, and everything in it—fields, farms, buildings, boats—is, happily, to scale. More than a hundred isles and islets make it up; multicolored, infinitely varied in size and shape and mood, overlapping and blending in a striking mosaic of rocky cliff, flowering field, blue bay, hill of yellow gorse or purple heather, and open sea. Scattered in a tight circle around a lakelike central bay called The Road, often within a hundred yards of one another and never more than a mile or two apart, the larger land masses are sheltered from the full force of the Atlantic by outlying rocks and islands that were once the great graveyard of Atlantic shipping.

Air travel has brought the island capital of St. Mary's within 20 minutes of the Cornish mainland, yet the atmosphere of seabound remoteness remains intact: that rare, pristine quality that makes the Scillies seem as far away from it all as the islands of the South Seas. Reinforcing this mood is the presence of many uninhabited islands in the group, so that the traveler has at his finger tips—from one hour to the next, if he likes—the settled (St. Mary's), the thinly settled (the other inhabited islands), and the completely wild solitude of all the rest.

But perhaps "uninhabited" is not quite the right word, for though there are no people, there are birds, seals, and dolphins leaping in the quiet bays; and there are, too, the undisturbed and haunting remains of the life—from Bronze Age tombs to the cottages of 18th-century fishermen—that went before.

For all that they are miniatures, the Scillies have a history as long and tantalizingly mysterious as any place in England. It begins in megalithic times, with men who somehow built tombs of immense granite blocks and worked the richest deposits of flint in the west of England. And here the puzzles begin. Why are so many of the dramatic little sea-sweeping hills of the Isles crowned with these circles and chambers of stone, made with so much labor? Cornwall is richer in such remains than any other place in western Europe, yet these little gorse-and-granite islands have more than three times as many as the whole Cornish mainland. In the Knackyboy Cairn on St. Martin's, a great find of Bronze Age pottery was made in 1948, and with it bronze and beads that gave evidence of trade with the Near East in those times.

TO LOOK into the serene, welcoming faces of the boatmen and flower farmers, you would not believe that once the islanders were expert smugglers and—much worse—wreckers who lured ships to their doom on the rocks and sacked them. But the Scillies have known hard times, and there still are deep-sea sailors in these waters who claim that the favorite Scillonian toast of old was: "Here's to me and my wife; to our son and his wife; we four; no more; may the Lord send a vessel ashore. Amen."

No trace of this sentiment seems to survive on Scilly today, no doubt because of the remarkable uplifting of the Isles effected by the paternalistic government of Augustus Smith, a Hertfordshire squire who leased them from the Crown in 1834 and spent the next 40 years in a devoted work of renovation.

If Squire Smith had done nothing else, his planting of the Abbey (Please turn the page)

Gardens on the island of Tresco would endear him to Scillonians and to all the world of flower lovers. His gardens, rising in terraces above the sea, among the ruins of a 12th-century Benedictine priory, not only are a delight to wander in but are without botanical peers in Britain. Mr. Smith began the planting of his woods and gardens with hundreds of pine and eucalyptus trees to baffle the winds. Then, for three generations, captains of the island ships helped with specimens brought back from the ends of the earth, until today it stands as a kind of gardener's miracle, a small-scale subtropical paradise on a North Atlantic island.

Sheltered by neighboring islands where frost is almost unknown, the visitor arriving even in late December finds all the color and luxuriance of the southern hemisphere: proteas from Table Mountain still belatedly in flower and acacias of both woods and formal gardens just coming into blossom, so that wherever you walk you come upon towering golden or primrose masses of mimosa. And there, at the bottom of the gardens, is the appropriate Scilly complement to exotic trees and shrubs: the extraordinary collection of figureheads brought from old-time wrecks, a brilliant piece of garden ornamentation.

IN THESE islands so full of surprises, the most improbable plants are considered weeds: agapanthus, mesembryanthemum, echiums, and alien stonecrops which include those enormous houseleeks, the aconiums of the Canary Islands. Everywhere the eye is engaged by a mixture of the fantastic and the fabulous. Near a pond along a country road on Tresco, for example stands a long row of cabbage trees—more like Africa or New Zealand than any place in England. Nearby, a datura tree hung with immense tubular orange- and lemon-colored flowers looms over a garden hedge. Fuschias, geraniums, and myrtles grow to a stupendous size. Characteristic, too, are the live hedges that top the dry-stone banks along the traffic-less roads, for where pittosporum has not been used, hebes have been planted, their pink and purple flowers seeming to bloom all through the year.

This extensive use of Australian plants is functional and not merely for aesthetic effect. There is nothing like them for wind erance. The ingenious Scillonian gardeners have experimented widely with wind-trapping devices, and the landscape, dominated by windbreaks of various kinds, is a study in such devices, which range from clipped and poled sycamore and elm to the seemingly flimsy railings of upright rushes held by double-straining wires. Euonymus and escallonia are also widely used in the hedges, along with veronica and tamarisk, which is more effective than it looks, they say. Evergreens are prominent too, of course, since maximum shelter is needed for the bulb fields in winter and spring. Any gardener with a wind problem will find the islanders' experiments fertile with suggestion.

DOES all this suggest a dream-like inaccessibility? In feeling, yes; in fact, the boat from Penzance, recommended only for good sailors, goes daily to St. Mary's in three hours; and the BEA flight from St. Just, near Penzance, takes 20 minutes. The latter is a delight, especially at the moment when, from the low-flying plane, the traveler gets his first glimpse of the unexpected: the Scillies scattered like autumn leaves, green, gold, and buff in a clear blue sea, a whole gleaming world of their own. Bulb fields, the tiny boats sharp and bright, the solid granite houses of Hugh Town, a castle, lighthouses—and so down to earth on St. Mary's, the inevitable starting place whether you come by sea or by air.

From Hugh Town quay the little fleet of launches goes out every day with provisions, mail, and passengers for the "off islands"—none more than an hour away. (Other launches make island-to-island excursion trips, or they can be hired by the hour or the day.) And here, in the one real town of the Isles (pop. about 1,000) are all the hotels—with one important exception—most of the guest houses, the shops, movies, pubs, what little there is in the way of busyness or entertainment. Night-life might be said to comprise billiards, snooker, darts, and an occasional dance at the Town Hall, though the five hotels do have their cocktail bars. This is the only one of the islands with an airport or with anchorage for anything larger than a launch. Compared with the mainland, it is more serene and old-fashioned; compared to the other islands it seems quite bustling and metropolitan.

Yet St. Mary's with its small guesthouse flower farms spotted here and there over the low hills is in no way garish. Its hinterland of endlessly flowering fields and rocky bays is well worth a day's excursion, either afoot or on the bus that makes a circle tour. The view of islands from its golf course is one of the sights of Great Britain; its bookshop offers a good chance to get oriented with the very useful six-inch maps of the Isles and with the several slim volumes about the area. A good place, too, the bookshop, for getting acquainted, though you will find boatmen, innkeepers, flower farmers, and storekeepers on all five inhabited islands talkative enough, especially if you are a gardener, flower-watcher, or bird-watcher. Binoculars, good walking shoes, and comfortable clothes are about all that's needed in the way of equipment.

But for absolute refreshment and complete release from the run of everyday life, an even better idea would be to head straight for the unblemished loveliness of Tresco's gardens and beaches. More than half the size of St. Mary's but with only one-tenth as many people, Tresco has the newest and most appealing of the hotels, the Island Hotel, whose launch meets its guests at Hugh Town quay. This is one of those uncommon hotels that is something more than a place to sleep and eat. Handsomely and unpretentiously this one-story building of 28 tasteful rooms and wide windows looking out to sea makes the best possible use of a superb setting, of flower gardens, green hills, bold rocks, and the sea. Beaches of silver sand are a few steps away, and the hotel has fishing and sailing facilities. (About $12 a day with meals; reservations a necessity; open December 20th to October 31st.)

TRESCO has two tiny villages. One has the simple New Inn, combined with the general store and the quay; the other consists of the church and school. There are walkable roads and footpaths leading to miles of beaches that look untrodden since creation, vast stretches of white sand and shell, alive with countless birds, that lie just below the moors of dense heather or rhododendron.

Close to the lake is the fragrant forest that opens upon the Abbey Gardens. In the other direction, from the village of New Grimsby, a footpath follows the hilly west coast for half a mile to the solitary round tower called Cromwell's Castle, and then up the near-by hill to the ruins of King Charles's Castle and an awesome view of sea and islands. All this might be seen in a day or two, but a week is not too long for Tresco's unhurried pleasures.

With its surrounding satellite islands, Tresco is a world within a world, an ideal base for excursions that take one still deeper into the solitude of birds and beaches and hilltops, and finally to that rarest of travel pleasures: a world of one's own, an island all to yourself. Nothing could be simpler. Take a launch for a day and wander into the last wilderness of England, where nothing has changed for centuries. It is a return to the elemental, to nature at full strength. Refreshed, undistracted, the senses sharpen; one comes alive to the marvelous detail of wild flowers and sea plants, birds and sea caves, Bronze Age tombs and the traces of an ancient village, endless changes of light and color on cliff and sea. Solid experience, without ostentation or modishness.

CLOSEST to Tresco is Bryher: 84 people; church, post office, and school; 353 acres of the most dramatic contrast. On its north and west coasts this is the most rugged of the islands. A high sea in Hell Bay is unforgettable. But the east coast is sheltered and altogether mild; and just north of The Town, as the village is called, is the Lookout Station on Watch Hill, with its magnificent panorama of the whole of Tresco and a dozen other islands. From the sands of Bryher's Rushy Bay one can sail in 15 minutes to the loneliness and long-echoing memories of Samson Island. If there are no footprints on its north-shore landing beach, the chances are very good that the island is yours alone.

Uninhabited since 1855, Samson is 80 romantic acres of hills and ruins and beach. Many of its young men were drowned in a shipwreck during the Napoleonic wars, and its decline followed. On the tops of its striking twin hills are two of the most impressive of the Bronze Age sepulchral barrows. It would be hard to imagine a nobler burial place in the British Isles. Rude pillars, circles of stones and barrows—all prehistoric—are to be found throughout the Scillies; they are most plentiful on St. Agnes, Gugh, Treseco, Samson, and St. Mary's.

Two miles eastward from Treseco is St. Martin's: 141 people (in three towns!) on 682 acres. Here the clarity and shallowness of the bays, combined with a sandy seabed, produce ranges and changes of color of unimaginable beauty. The southern slopes of its hills are warm and luxuriant with flower farms; you can stay at one of them, go to bed by the light of an oil lamp, eat shrimp caught by your farmer, and talk flowers in a large, homely kitchen all evening.

CLOSE to St. Martin's—you can walk to it across a granite bar at low tide—is White Island with its many traces of 4,000 years of life: a walled enclosure (an ancient field enclosure of the Iron Age?), a kelp kiln of rough stones, a small tomb on a commanding hilltop. A little further off are the so-called Eastern Isles, and on the largest of them, Great Ganilly, a bathing beach of utter solitude, and always the swarming sea birds. Between Treseco and the lighthouse on Round Island is St. Helen's with its fine views, where the ruins of a church are all that remain of one of Treseco Abbey's "cells"; and here was the refuge of the hermit, St. Elid, whose tomb is said to have made this a place of pilgrimage and one of Britain's most important Dark Ages sites.

St. Agnes, last and least tame of the five inhabited Isles, is a fascinating mixture of strange rock formations and flowers, of excellent beaches and superb sea colors, 72 hardy people, and the second-oldest lighthouse in Britain, whose tower stair, open to visitors, is reached through the parlor of a friendly native.

About half a mile over the water from St. Agnes' west coast lies Annet Island, a bird sanctuary of great interest that may be visited except during the mid-April to mid-July nesting season. Near it are the Western Rocks, craggy outposts inhabited only by colonies of gray seals. It was here that so many great ships met their stormy end, until a century ago, when the tall Bishop Rock Lighthouse was built. It makes sense to hire a boat in order to combine St. Agnes, Annet, and the Rocks in a leisurely day-long excursion, something the regular excursion launches fail to do. Don't visit the Scillies between late June and mid-September: too many Englishmen fill every available room. But any other time of year is as good or better. The climate of the Scillies comes as close to being eternal springtime as any place in the northern hemisphere; it's as warm in winter as is the Riviera. The best time is spring, which means in this case the time of the early flowers, from January through April; they're at their best in March. In these months of flower harvest, their perfume and sap are everywhere; and everywhere are great bouquets in cottage windows, in people's arms, or growing in marvelous profusion by the wayside as well as in the fields. Then, too, one experiences the good communal spirit as the islanders drop everything to fill their baskets on the hillsides and take them in pony carts to the quays where human chains load the flowers onto the little boats for shipment to the main harbor at Hugh Town. In some well-favored places, daffodil picking may begin even before Christmas. But there is no season when the Scillies are flowerless. Notable flower shows are held, too, in mid-January, early March, early April.

THE quickest way to get there is by BOAC jet to London, then by train from Paddington Station down to Penzance. But for something different—with more of Great Britain along the way, less traffic, and freedom from the London snarl—take the daily BOAC flight to Prestwick, near Glasgow and Edinburgh, which gets you there in under six hours. Ask the airline to have a rented car waiting at the airport, for the very rewarding off-track itinerary from Scotland down through the Lake District to Chester, then through Wales to Gloucester and the Cotswold Hills, and finally through Bath into Devon and Cornwall. While you are in the Scillies, the car can safely be left at the St. Just airport, then used for the very pleasant journey up to London through Exeter and Salisbury, perhaps, or along England's south coast, where it can be returned. From London, BOAC flies direct to New York, Boston, Washington, Chicago, Detroit, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Montreal, and Toronto.

For information, including a useful descriptive list of accommodations on each island, write to Council, Town Hall, Hugh Town, St. Mary's. Or, closer to home, write British Travel Association, 689 Fifth Ave., New York, N. Y.

How to divide a too-long room

When apartments are designed from outside in, instead of from inside out, there may be rooms, such as this, that must be altered to make them livable

PHOTOGRAPHS BY WESLEY BALZ

The living-room side of the new partition has a cross beam to match the molding and serve as a valance for the curtains. The supporting columns add an architectural accent to the undistinguished space.

The shape of the room was such that it could not be conveniently used for any one function. The partition makes it into two separate areas with proportions that can be furnished for living and for dining.

The dining room may be opened by drawing the curtains, or may be closed when required. Columns, curtains, and cross beam may be easily taken down when moving. Apartment designed by Jones & Leidstrand.

How to clean garage floors and driveways

Here's everything you need to know to remove grease, oil, and other unsightly spots from concrete and asphalt paving

By DAVID X. MANNERS

• Even if your own car doesn't, those of delivery and service people will drip grease and oil on your driveway, carport, or garage paving. This causes trouble in two ways. 1. It's unsightly. 2. People walking through it track it into the house.

Whether your paving is concrete or asphalt, the offending drippings are not difficult to remove, though some good hard scrubbing may be involved. But don't expect miracles. You'll remove only what is on, or very close to, the surface. When staining is chronic, it will have penetrated deep, and it is extremely difficult to eradicate all evidences. If staining has been widespread, the simplest answer is to paint or recoat the entire area. But you'll still have to clean it first.

The theory of cleaning is quite simple. You need a solvent to free the oil or grease and turn it into a solution. Then you use a detergent to wash it away. On concrete you can use solvents like kerosene, paint thinner, and benzene to dissolve the oil or grease. On asphalt you can't. The asphalt binder would be dissolved and softened. For use on asphalt, there are special heavy-duty cleaning agents (detailed later) that won't affect the binder. They may also be used on concrete. When you clean away grease and oil stains you will also clean away such incidental stains as those caused by gasoline, hydraulic fluid, antifreeze, and rust.

Cleaning results depend on: 1. The porosity of the paving. (A sealed and painted concrete floor is easier to keep clean than an unsealed floor.) 2. How long the stain has remained. (Remove fresh stains promptly and you'll seldom have

Never serve the coffee...without the Cream

[[ Harvey's Bristol Cream, that is ]]

An after-dinner drink should be sweet... but it shouldn't get sticky about it. Harvey's Bristol Cream doesn't. The sweetness of this rare imported sherry is subtle, its lightness refreshing. Small wonder so many enjoy it before the meal as well. If you'd like the perfect after-dinner drink, never serve the coffee without Harvey's Bristol Cream®. Just chill before serving. John Harvey and Sons, Ltd.

any problems.) 3 Whether temperature is high or low. (Grease is easier to remove in warm weather.)

Cleaning concrete

If the concrete is generally clean, with only a few disfiguring spots, an aerosol spray degreaser can do an effective job. You can buy them at most service stations. They're expensive, but simple. You just spray them on the soiled spot, then rinse them away with the garden hose. Prestone makes one in 16-oz. size for $1.75.

An excellent "poultice treatment" for a recalcitrant spot is to make a paste of Ajax cleanser (or equivalent) and kerosene. Apply this to the oily area and allow it to remain several hours before scrubbing and hosing. In this, as in all cleaning methods, two or more applications may be necessary.

Never use gasoline as a solvent for grease and oil stains. Besides being dangerous, it evaporates too fast. Kerosene is ideal, for it will stay active on a grease or oil spot for the 20 or 30 minutes usually necessary to work the spot loose.

The area should then be scrubbed with a detergent, such as Tide or Mr. Clean, and rinsed with a hose. Fiber-bristled brushes do a good scrubbing job. If the brush has a broom-length handle, you'll be able to put full bodyweight on your efforts and also spare your back.

"Gunk" is a product sold in service stations and auto-supply stores for removing grease of all kinds (98 cents qt.). You mix one part of it to four or five parts of kerosene, soak the soiled area with it, then follow with the usual scrubbing and rinsing.

When cleaning concrete floors in preparation for painting, use a phosphoric-acid cleaner such as Rust-Oleum "Surfa-Etch." Steelcote "Clean and Etch," or Kiefer's "Crete-Prep" ($1.89 qt.). They not only remove the oil and grease but neutralize concrete alkalinity, necessary in obtaining a good bond when painting. Phosphoric is a relatively mild acid. Muriatic acid, sometimes used industrially in cases of severe soiling, is too harsh for residential use, and would tend to make concrete porous and weak.

Residential concrete is traditionally of poor quality. It is seldom cured at all, and it is often porous and subject to "dusting off." No matter how often you sweep it, you still raise a dust, for the concrete is powdering under your broom. Such floors can be greatly improved by application of a hardener before painting. It will insure the best possible base for paint, improve its adhesion, and extend its durability. The best hardener is sodium fluorosilicate. It is a powder, and costs about 50 cents lb., enough for 100 sq. ft. It is available under such trade formulations as "Densicon-76" at any lumber yard handling Weyerhaeuser products.

An excellent finish for concrete floors is a chlorinated rubber paint, (Please turn to page 193)

HONEYCOMB CELLULAR BLANKET!!

FAMOUS HAWICK HONEYCOMB BLANKETS are made only in Scotland—of Scottish wools that are carefully chosen to serve generations. So superior in quality, they become family heirlooms . . . they are a wise investment! Their unusual open weave provides a thermal quality that makes them a pleasure to use on early fall nights or coldest winter. Wool is nature's best thermostat—and the open weave improves on it!

This special weave gives the blanket thousands of tiny "air pockets." These keep cold air out, warm air in—under the blanket—and they make the blanket "as light as air." A cellular blanket is a wonderful experience to sleep under. It keeps you cozily warm. It is feather-light. It lets your body breathe. It doesn't press heavily on sensitive feet. It is ideal for air-conditioned summer rooms—and it's a blessing in winter when you want to keep warm without oppressive weight. Honeycomb Cellular Blankets have other advantages:

- They are made entirely of pure, new wool—of the quality Scotland has made famous.
- They are bound with quality Satin.
- Considering their superior Scottish quality, they are low-priced. See price list below.
- They wash well—and come out in the same lovely colors they went in—and in the same, lovely condition.
- They are moth-proofed.
- So beautiful you can use them as spreads.

We ship them to you direct from Scottish mill, which helps to save you money. Allow 2 to 3 weeks delivery. If you can't wait that long, add $3.60 for air shipment and get them in about one week. Otherwise we pay postage. You pay only nominal duty on arrival.

Honeycomb Cellular Blankets are a wise investment . . . in beauty . . . in comfort . . . in years of service. They make wonderful gifts for any occasion.

The Art of SCRIMSHAW

... developed on the rolling ships of old New Bedford has almost disappeared. Only a few men still follow in the footsteps of the seamen who painstakingly and with great delicacy engraved the ivory from the whales they caught.

Our work is done in this ancient tradition, on genuine ivory and entirely by hand.

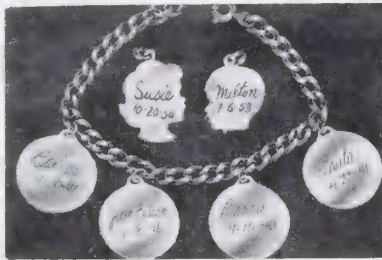

The decoration on each piece we show, is an old whaling ship. Links and mountings are heavily gold-plated. The ultimate gift for those you particularly wish to please.

What a wonderful gift

for anyone with a nice home or country place!

So many ways BETTER than a wheelbarrow plus so many other uses!

This wonderfully handy CART holds TWICE as much as an ordinary Wheelbarrow!

It easily carries loads up to 300 pounds!

The weight balances on the axle—you don't carry it in your hands. Push or pull with ONE HAND. Won't tip over. SO much easier going thanks to TWO BIG 20-inch wheels! Rubber tires. Ball bearings. Only 30" wide to go through narrow doors and gangways.

Built by Vermont craftsmen to last a lifetime. Leave it outdoors all year long if you wish. Hard use won't hurt it. Tight, welded all-steel construction. Loose sand, dirt, etc., won't spill out the sides. Flat bottom keeps pots, pails, bottles, etc., from tipping over!

Satisfaction guaranteed. Use the Cart for three full months. If you are not delighted, just send it back for full refund!

This handsome Lawn and Garden CART, which we build up here in Vermont, could be the perfect gift for someone you want to please very much!

For birthdays, anniversaries, Christmas, Mother's Day, Father's Day, for special occasions like weddings or when someone retires or moves to a new home or when you want to say a special "Thank You" for a pleasant visit or other reason—or just anytime you want to make some one very happy, please think of our CARTS.

Some of the reasons they make such grand gifts are:

- Everyone in the family enjoys using them—mother, father, grandmother, grandfather, all the young people and the hired man, too, if there is one!
- They are useful the year 'round, and are so many ways better than a wheelbarrow plus having so many other uses! (Please see illustrations.)
- Our Carts are built to last for years and years. You know the moment you see and try one that nothing but the most careful workmanship and the best of materials went into building it. They are a compliment to even the most beautiful of homes.
- They are ideal for GROUP giving . . . as for the whole family to give mother or father or to both on a wedding anniversary—or for the "Boss" for Christmas, or for a congregation to their minister, or for club or fraternal members in appreciation to a retiring officer.

There really isn't any gift we know of which is so appropriate in so many situations, which will be enjoyed by so many, and which will be used and appreciated for so many years. You'll feel good because you'll know you have done something just right when you give one of these CARTS!

There are several models, different sizes and prices, even a "Build-It-Yourself" Kit for those who want one—so please mail the coupon below for a FREE Catalog and complete details. Shipment can be made to you or directly to whomever you say, transportation prepaid.

We haven't said so above, but we believe the chances are pretty good you and your family will want one of our CARTS for yourselves. If so, we have some very Good News for you about that, too. So please do mail the coupon now. We'll send you that FREE Catalog and that Good News by return mail!

Warms with air instead of weight

THE BEDTIME LUXURY of warmth without weight can be yours to enjoy this winter . . . and yours to give to the favored names on your gift list. Thanks to British ingenuity with woolens, Shillcraft Therma-Weave Blankets provide 50% more warmth than other blankets of the same weight, by actual laboratory tests. Because of their lightness, they are remarkably comfortable with no unpleasant pressure on body or feet.

USE IT ALL-YEAR-ROUND. Unlike other blankets, a Shillcraft Therma-Weave can be used in every season, eliminating storage problems. For here is the first successful use in blankets of the thermal insulation principle. You know how that works in thermal underwear and thermos bottles — a pocket of still air insulates against outside temperatures.

Similarly, thousands of tiny air cells are woven into ThermoWeave blankets, so that in winter a light cover on top turns each cell into a still air pocket that keeps out the cold. In summer, use the blanket without a cover. Then the air cells let your body "breathe," dissipating heat and allowing you to sleep comfortably cool.

SO BEAUTIFUL it has the look of a fine bedspread. And durable too. That's why you'll find Shillcraft Therma-Weave blankets in the first-class cabins of great transatlantic liners, and in the best suites of leading luxury hotels.

CHOOSE 100% WOOL OR COTTON. Both are suitable for winter and summer. Want downy-soft luxury? Then take satin-edged WOOL—a stunning gift for shower, wedding, baby or business remembrance. Or if you prefer COTTON—it has self-hemmed edges and is completely machine washable.

THESE ARE THE ORIGINAL THERMA-WEAVE BLANKETS — NOT SOLD IN STORES. AVAILABLE ONLY FROM SHILLCRAFT at money-saving, direct-from-importer prices. Use the handy coupon below.

Can You Tell The Better Buy—

Is it X, or Is it Y?

How good a shopper are you? Which is the better value in mixed fruits — quart-size jar Brand "X" at 39¢ or 28-oz. can Brand "Y" at 32¢? How economical is that "economy-size" detergent, the "family-size" toothpaste, "giant-size" box of cookies?

With easy-to-use VALUMETER you'd instantly know that your real cash saving on Brand "Y" fruit is 2¢, or more than 6%. That's a higher percentage return than you'd get from most savings accounts or stock dividends.

Can you afford to be "taken" by tricky packaging and pricing? Handy VALUMETER conserves your family's hard-earned money, ready at all times to show you the best buy among the confusion of weights, sizes and prices — liquid or dry measure. Be smart, be thrifty — watch your pennies and the dollars will take care of themselves!

VALUMETER fits in pocket or purse, returns many times its low cost in just a few shopping trips. Made of durable, easy-to-read plastic for long-lasting service, sent to you on unconditional money-back guarantee. Only $1.00 each, postpaid, direct from manufacturer (not available elsewhere). Order several today for thoughtful gift-giving.

AMAZING CIRCUS of 6 GROWING ANIMALS

Watch them appear to grow
BIGGER and BIGGER

Amazing but true! Watch these toy animals grow like CRAZY faster and faster, bigger and bigger every day right before your eyes. Both children and adults will laugh and thrill with excitement as Ozzie the Ostrich grows his own full-feathered plume. Simba the Lion grows a long flowing mane. Smiley the Porcupine grows needles of quills. Sleepy the Hound Dog grows sad droopy ears. And Scamper the Squirrel grows a big bushy tail. And they keep growing bigger and bigger for weeks and weeks of thrills and excitement.

The Secret of Growth

These amazing toy pets actually feed and start to grow as soon as you "lead" them to a plastic cup or glass of water. The secret is a new scientific process that releases a horticultural seed on a special flat porous material that starts the miracle of life and growth. No food or special care is required to grow your own animal circus. You can even give the little fellows "haircuts" if you want. Not yet sold in stores. You must order direct by mail. So don't delay, be first in your neighborhood. Mail coupon today on full money back guarantee formulated with Goodyear's Pliolite S-5. The very best finish (but twice as expensive) is epoxy paint. Epoxy offers far greater protection and longevity than any other coating. Grease and oil on an epoxy surface wash away easily with detergent. Epoxy is unaffected by gasoline, antifreeze, hydraulic fluids, and harsh alkaline cleaners.

GARAGE FLOORS AND DRIVEWAYS

Cleaning asphalt

The first thing to do is scrape away any solid matter. With this grease cake off, you will find it oily underneath. This oil can usually be washed away with a detergent and very hot water.

A more powerful solvent and cleaner, trisodium phosphate, is available in consumer formulations under such names as "Oakite." Dissolve two cups in a gallon of very hot water. Pour it on the stained areas, allow to soak 20 to 30 minutes, then scrub and hose away. Repeat as necessary.

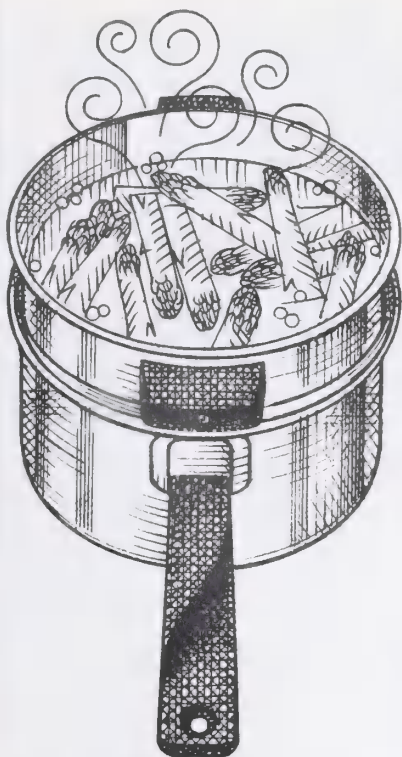

A heavy-duty cleaner that has good scouring action is "Chem-Clean" (Chem-Clean Products, College Point, N.Y. 25 lb. drum, $5). You sprinkle it on the wet floor or driveway, brush it in, and let it stand 20 to 30 minutes; then hose it away. (A similar product, "Swaco," is available from Swaco Products, Hollis, N.Y.)

All the foregoing cleaning agents are also effective on concrete. If your concrete is painted, hard scrubbing with heavy-duty cleaners may remove some deteriorated paint film.

For softened asphalt

If dripping gasoline and oil have softened your asphalt so that you dig it up when you try to scrape off its grease cake, the only thing to do is to clean out the softened material and apply a patch. You can buy Sakrete asphalt patch by the bag at hardware stores and lumber yards (80 lbs., $1.75).

When a driveway has been badly stained, the only way to restore its good appearance is by recoating it. Many asphalt emulsions and cutbacks are being sold to restore black asphalt to a new black appearance. Unfortunately, many of them offer no real protection to the asphalt and the renewal is short lived. The very best product for driveways is Jennite, sold by lumber yards handling Weyerhaeuser products and by Sears. Jennite does four things. 1. It keeps water from penetrating the material and thus eliminates frost damage. 2. It prevents damage and staining by oil and gas. 3. It stops the oxidation that turns asphalt gray and brittle. 4. It seals in asphalt's light oils so they are not evaporated by sun heat.

Here's the beautiful cookware that gives you wrap-around even heat

FLINT Tri-Clad Stainless Steel Cookware

You'll love the way it looks. The way it cooks—evenly—all the way up the sides. Flint's famous Radiant Heat Core sandwiched between gleaming stainless steel walls makes the exciting difference. Self-basting cover has a Vapor Seal Rim. Saves Vitamins. Enhances fresh delicious flavors. Cover inverts into the pan for easy storage. Cool-touch oven-proof handles are shaped to fit either hand. Sets from $19.95. Shown: 2-quart double boiler . . . $12.95.

Of course, the best time to apply Jennite is on newly placed asphalt. In that way you keep it in its original prime condition. If you wish to apply Jennite over a soiled surface, after cleaning, seal the surface with shellac.

Jennite fills all pores, produces a rich, black, new-looking surface that will last three to five years before renewal is necessary. Jennite has the consistency of mayonnaise, is applied with squeegee or brush. One gallon ($1.50) is enough to give two coats on 50 square feet.

New vinyl coatings for asphalt do a sealing and protective job similar to that done by Jennite, but in color. (They are made by the same manufacturer, Maintenance, Inc., Wooster, O.) Colors available include a "brick red," "grass green," and a "concrete gray." If you wish to modify these colors to suit your own taste, it can be done with water-ground pigments, available at any paint store.

Preventive maintenance

To protect your garage floor where the car is parked and most soiling occurs, use a plastic oil-drip pan (28" by 41" by 1" deep, about $2.25). They're sold at auto-supply stores and by mail-order houses. If you wish, you can keep the pan bottom covered with sand. An improvement on the catch pan is a new absorbent floor mat. Similar in dimensions to a pan (2' by 3'), it not only catches oil, it absorbs it. It will soak up over two gallons before saturation, is designed to be walked on or driven over without tracking oil. It repels water. ($8.95 from Compositions, Inc., 646 Chestnut S.W., Grand Rapids, Mich.)

A drip area can be built into a garage or carport floor, filled with sand or gravel. The catching material can be replaced when it becomes soiled. The problem here is that you don't have a clear, unbroken floor should you wish to use the area for other purposes.

For quick cleanup of new spills on either asphalt or concrete, use a porous silicate or expanded mica. Throw it over the spill, let it soak up the oil. It can then be swept up. Products of this type are sold by auto-supply stores under such names as "Zorbal," "Speedi-Dry," and "Oil Dri."

"Lovely to look at— Delightful to hold"

THESE FINE NEW CRYSTAL PATTERNS BY BRYCE

And thrilling to own, too. Any one of these splendid examples of Bryce artistry will flatter your favorite table settings.

NEWPORT

All the elegance of fine dining in the days of colonial America has been captured in this magnificent Newport pattern by Bryce. Yet, the simple classic lines, so typical of better colonial design, makes it appropriate with even the most modern of table settings. Newport is available in wine, sherbet or champagne shapes as well as the goblet shown. Visit your nearest fine glassware department, or write to Bryce for the name of the dealer nearest you.

ROSLYN—PLATINUM BAND

From the oldest and largest glass house in America dedicated exclusively to hand-blowing fine lead crystal, comes this delightful Roslyn pattern. Notice that the bowl is chaste and delicate with a band of platinum tracing the lip and the graceful stem is laced with fluting to catch the light with jewel-like lustre. Roslyn is available at finer stores in the goblet form pictured here and also in iced-tea, sherbet, claret or footed juice.

FLIRTATION

To see and to hold lovely Flirtation is to fall in love all over again with the glory of owning fine hand-blown lead crystal. The bowl is upright and regal with an elegant hand-cutting dancing around it like a coronet, while the stem is tall and stately and relatively severe to best complete the design ensemble. Like Roslyn, Flirtation is available as a goblet as shown at the left, or in iced-tea, sherbet, claret or footed juice.

The Allen of great concerts

is the organ for your home

The organ you may decide to buy for your home is making its name memorable from coast to coast.

In the West, the magnificent Allen starred in Hollywood Bowl with the celebrated Hollywood Bowl Orchestra. In the East, the Allen has also made history.

Lincoln Center officials chose it from many organs to perform as a solo instrument at the opening of Philharmonic Hall. Great events, these! And more to come.

The Allen for your home is made with the same sensitive care. The exact craftsmanship. The musical versatility that is a joy to live with.

The Theatre Compact below is the sensational new organ for the home. It's an ultracompact model no bigger than a spinet, really, with a charming rounded horseshoe console. A true theatre model that combines the emotion of the theatre with big organ sound. In addition to real percussion stops there are 'surprise' effects that are new to electronic organs.

Below is the Allen Organette, a stunning spinet in French Provincial. It is authentically handcrafted and tastefully hand decorated for gracious appeal. Its beautiful tone will satisfy long after the novelty of owning an organ has worn off. You can see and hear these organs, with church and concert models, at the nearest Allen dealer. Meanwhile the coupon below will bring you full information quickly... free.

“What’s this magic carpet bit?”

Some forthright questions and comments from a critical traveler, some answers, and some suggestions to help make all your future trips more enjoyable

By MARION GOUGH

● A friend, who happens to be a reader and a dedicated traveler and who also turns out to be a pretty outspoken critic of the travel industry in general and of us in particular, writes:

“Do you really always love everything everywhere? The stuff you write sounds as if you did, yet I can hardly believe that everything is peachy and creamy and pure magic carpet wherever you go.

“It certainly isn’t with me. Are you under the impression you’ve reached the ultimate in cheap transportation when you sit for seven hours with your knees in your mouth on an economy-class flight? Do you think that cold filet mignon and the continuous service of booze can make up for the extra cost of flying first class so that you can assume a decent human sitting position? I happen not to think so.

“Do you like those sudden assessments no one has warned you about, like landing taxes, airport taxes, and hotel bills with eighteen-percent service charges and lord knows what kind of government stamps on them? Even if you’ve been told about that eighteen percent, the fact is usually glossed over that this jumps your hotel bills by nearly a fifth.

“Do you really believe that the cut-and-dried itineraries usually offered to tourists give them any real insight into the seven or eight countries they visit in three weeks? Would you honestly love your travel agent—as you’ve said you do—if he insisted on booking you into a plush hotel when you’d your heart set on a pensione? ## "WHAT'S THIS MAGIC CARPET BIT?"

go somewhere off the cliché tourist beat?

"You seem to encourage travelers to get the lay of the land by taking sight-seeing buses. Are you edified by the average guide's stereotyped information and sorry jokes? Do you enjoy being rushed through places you've always dreamed about in order to spend twice as much time in a factory or souvenir shop where the guide presumably gets a commission on whatever you buy?

"These are some of the seamier sides of travel that make me wonder what's this magic-carpet bit I always seem to be reading about. They particularly irritate me because I think they'd be easy to correct. Travelers are always muttering about them, but people who write about travel seem to ignore them.

"I believe that travel is such an essential part of living the good and intelligent life today that it's almost a responsibility to keep going places. It's certainly the most direct method to date for helping people understand each other, and nothing yet can take away the built-in glamour of setting out to see the world. You don't really think, do you, that a few well-chosen negatives now and then are going to keep your readers home? I think they'd even help them enjoy their travels more. They mightn't go off so starry-eyed, but they'd at least be spared the sour taste of disillusion."

TO ALL our captious friend's specific questions, we answer a categorical "No." That ought to be "negative" enough to satisfy her.

No, we do not always like everything everywhere. But we usually find more to like than dislike, and we have certainly never been guilty of pretending enthusiasm we didn't feel. One has to live with oneself. The only place we've ever felt thoroughly ill at ease, unwelcome, and unable to communicate with is Teheran. And even there we enjoyed the unforgettably beautiful solace of fresh Iranian caviar such as we've never tasted before or since. Until now we've never written a word about Teheran, chiefly because we've discovered other travelers who found it engrossing, which makes us wonder if we'd given it a fair chance. Some day we'll go back and try it again.

Some of the most miserable hours we've ever spent have been in knee-chest position, claustrophobically buckled into the center spot of that triple-seated arrangement that banks both sides of the aircraft on economy flights. It isn't the threesome seating per se that reduces your dignity and makes you feel as if you were in bed with your fellow passengers, all 150 of them, but the skimpy space between the rows.

Almost as psychically traumatic is that below-the-salt feeling that overtakes us when the sliding doors shut us off from the lucky world of champagne and leg room up in first class. Presumably the first-class citizens are supported by rich uncles, traveling on expense accounts, or similarly smiled upon by Providence. Sometimes we even know one of those fortunate few—to whom we are denied access during flight.

IN THE long run, it is the futility of them that worries us most and sets us to wondering about what the future will bring. For, little by little, we see the economy section increasing in length and the first-class section declining. We note that those barricading accordion-fold doors and partitions have a demountable look. It's easy to imagine a day when the doors will come down and flights will be classless. But will this mean that then everybody will have to travel jackknifed in good old economy-class style?

The airlines, who know their own balance sheets better than we do, point out that their seating patterns are dictated by economic necessity. We wish they could strike a happier medium. Meantime, this close-quarter travel won't bother you so much if you remember all the money you're saving and apply the same philosophy to the flight as you do to a trip to the dentist—reflect that it will soon be over.

Airplane food generally seems to us to suffer from a pretentiousness of menu-planning. In our judgment the gourmet dishes never really come off, despite the almost miraculous expedition with which they are handled and served by those wondrously deft and hard-working stewardesses and stewards. Such dishes rarely do come off, even on solid ground, so it is expecting a lot from them to go through freezing, thawing and infrared ovens and arrive on your tray in perfect condition.

We have whiled away many a long winter's evening contemplating the casseroles and stews and heavy soups that might be substituted. (Please turn to page 237)

How to turn limitations into assets

● Experts assure us that when there are no problems in connection with creating something, nothing of character is likely to develop out of it. It is the circumventing of seemingly insurmountable obstacles that challenges the imagination and produces an inspired result.

When a house is being planned, the limitations to be overcome (if they are overcome) give the house its distinctive character. The seeds of success lie in problems like these: when the orientation is wrong, when there isn't enough money, when there mustn't be any stairs, or when the entry side is also the best for outdoor living. Obstacles will work for you, if you use them as opportunities to think more originally than others. On the next ten pages is a house that gained because its site and exposure had problems.

A glass bridge links the living and sleeping sections of this house on a very steep site. The usual formula for a hillside house might have worked, but a better solution evolved.

Sometimes Two Houses Can Work Better than One

Two separate units linked by a glass bridge helped to solve the problem of this difficult site

● When a site as spectacular as this one is available in an area as sought-after as Belvedere Island in San Francisco Bay, it usually means that there are problems to be surmounted—problems which so intimidated the unadventurous that they didn't buy.

The site slopes steeply to the cliff edge. This end of the island receives the full force of the winds from the southwest. The challenge of the site has been met by utilizing the upper, level portion of the land for parking and by projecting out over the cliff two separate houses linked by a glass bridge. The living house projects beyond the reversed triangle of the sleeping house to gain the view.

There still remained the problem of a sheltered space for outdoor living. A triangular deck was devised on the north side of the house, outside the kitchen, at the point where the level land ends and the house jumps off into space. This delightful outdoor family room is shielded from the wind by the house itself, but it has the handicap of being located on the approach side of the site. Its seclusion has been preserved by a change of levels and by a series of interrelated baffle fences that shield the house from the drive and the parking area. (Please turn the page)

"... First, a good site. Pick one at the most difficult spot—pick a site no one wants—but pick one that has features making for character: trees, individuality, a fault of some kind in the realtor's mind.

"That means getting out of the city.

"Then, standing on that site, look about you so that you see what has charm. What is the reason you want to build there? Find out. Then build your house so that you may still look from where you stood upon all that charmed you, and lose nothing of what you saw before the house was built, but see more.

"Architecture accentuates the character of the landscape, if the architecture is right."

in a lecture, 1938

The apex of the triangular living area is this prow of glass projecting out over the escarpment. It commands a sweeping view of the bay in both directions. Its angled planes seem to eliminate any sense of a barrier between inside and outside.

SOMETIMES TWO HOUSES CAN WORK BETTER continued

In extracting the best from the site, the owners had to allocate a larger-than-usual portion of their building expenditure to the massive foundation on which the house is built. At its apex, the living-room floor rests on a twenty-three-foot concrete foundation. Since the space below is completely enclosed, it can be assumed that at some later date this truly monumental space will be utilized by the owners to develop more exciting rooms. Its possibilities are enormous.

The expense of providing a foundation of such proportions was balanced by the small amount of bulldozing necessary. Most contours remain undisturbed. Character of the site was enhanced rather than tampered with. (Please turn the page)

← The larger triangle, which is the living house, has its base in the hillside. This less spectacular portion of the house contains the useful areas: entrance, kitchen, laundry, and storage. The smaller, two-story triangle of the sleeping house, right, has its base toward the bay, with a view for every bedroom.

A magnificent view of Sausalito and San Francisco Bay is visible from the apex of the triangular living house perched high on its massive base.

SOMETIMES TWO HOUSES CAN WORK BETTER continued

It has long been acknowledged that the best design for a house is the one that provides the most outside wall area for each room. Daylight, sunlight, and cross-ventilation are the things that make a house enjoyable and livable. The need to provide more outside wall area has been the incentive behind the many really good plans. The H-plan and the atrium plan are both outgrowths of this desire for closer relation between inside and outside.

Here is a fresh approach to the problem of how to get more exterior wall space. The owners and their architects rejected the rectangle of the conventional house. Instead, they made two triangular pavilions, linked by a glass bridge. A study of the plan above will show how much exterior wall surface was gained by breaking out of the confinement of the rectangular plan. (Please turn the page)

OWNERS: *Mr. and Mrs. T. E. Stanton*ARCHITECTS: *Marquis & Stoller*LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT: Lawrence Halprin

The plan, left, shows that the only access to this fortress-like promontory was on the north or sheltered side of the site. This was the only level area. Had the house been built here, the view would not have been as breath-taking and there would have been almost no level land left for parking or children's play. By choosing to let the house follow the contour of the land and project out from it, a more exciting and a more practical plan evolved, utilizing aerial space.

DRAWING BY MADELAINE THATCHER

The driveway and parking area are on the higher, level portion of the site. Off-the-street parking is provided for six cars. A series of interrelated baffle fences conceals the house and outdoor living spaces from the parking area. Four broad steps lead down to the level of the house from the entrance walk.

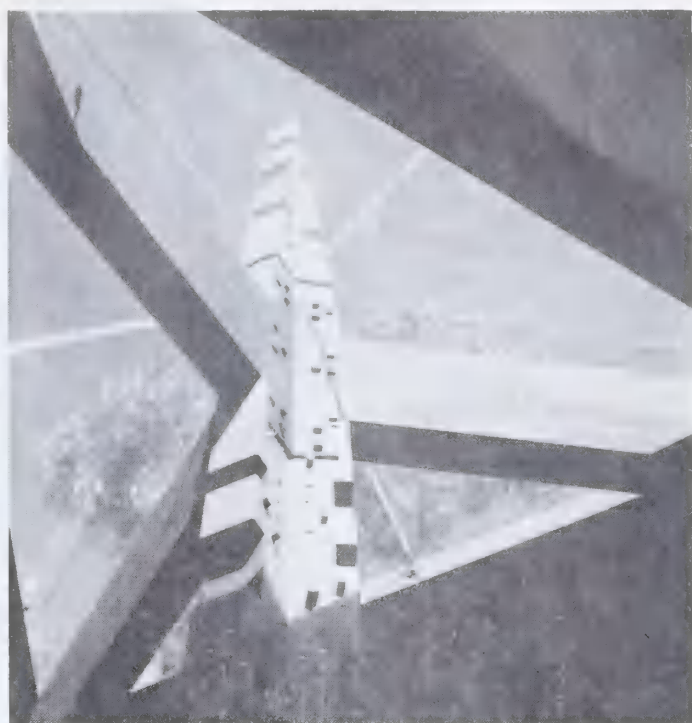

The triangular deck shown in the photo, left, is the most used and useful part of the house. Because the house shelters it from the wind, deck is used for outdoor dining seven months of the year. Cub Scouts meet here, and family projects are carried out. Paved area in foreground is the entrance walk.

SOMETIMES TWO HOUSES CAN WORK BETTER
continued

The triangular shape adopted for both units of the house has produced in the living room the kind of exciting space that would not have been possible in a conventional rectangle. Partitions are screen walls and do not interrupt the flow of space upward—for the triangular concept is expressed both in plan and vertically. The roof structure consists of three glued and laminated beams that meet in the center and are supported by a post that is treated in a decorative manner. A subnetwork of 2" by 6" beams spans the ceiling and supports square rafters set six inches apart to serve as nailers for the shingles of the roof. Copper-coated building paper forms an attractive ceiling—the warm tones of the copper complimenting the dark stain of the joists. The center post, designed by Sculptor Raymond Rice, is an integral part of the house and projects through the pyramidal plastic skylight to become a dramatic finial above the roof.

Early in the planning of the house, the owners were confronted with a major decision: They could build a conventionally designed house on the level part of their land and have funds available for an elegantly finished interior, or they could build an unconventional structure which would be exciting enough in its form and space so that the simplest of interior finishes would be adequate.

They chose the latter. There are no mosaic counter tops; there are no marble floors or sunken baths. The interior walls are almost entirely of gypsum board painted a pale, warm gray. The cabinet work is in mahogany plywood. The stucco exterior is yellow, to harmonize with the surrounding pin oaks. Redwood trim is blue-gray. (Please turn the page)

The delights of fluid space are exemplified by this view, looking back into the living room from its apex. There is soaring space in the pyramid of the skylighted roof, and flowing space in the glass-enclosed bridge linking the structure to the adjoining two-story triangle. The triangle contains the master suite and the bedrooms for the three children.

SOMETIMES TWO HOUSES CAN WORK BETTER continued

The only request the owners made of their architect was for a round table in the kitchen for family breakfasts. They got their table, and much more besides. They have a kitchen that really works. It is accessible from all parts of the house and yet it can be closed off completely, so that the messiest of household tasks can go on without anyone's being the wiser. The work counters were confined to one wall and a center island, so that the exterior wall could be all glass with sliding doors to the sheltered deck where so much of the family activity takes place. An ingenious arrangement allows a whole section of the rear wall of the kitchen to slide back into a pocket, revealing the well-planned laundry. That longed-for round breakfast table has set the tone for a real living kitchen. (Please turn to page 266)

View of kitchen above shows how ample floor space for family breakfasts was gained by organizing work surfaces on inner wall and island. Deck outside serves as the family play center.

A whole wall of sliding doors helps to make the kitchen an attractive place. Sliding wall above, left, opens to reveal well-equipped laundry. Ironing and mending are also done here. Cabinets at right were planned as storage for dining room.

When sliding doors are closed, below, all unsightly work clutter can be quickly concealed. This kitchen, with its adjacent deck, is an important living area of the house and is enjoyed by the entire family as well as by adult and young friends.

■ If you can recall the first designs in sofa beds, you will remember how bulky the pieces were and how cumbersome they were to open. Obviously each revealed what it was—a bed within a sofa.

Today's story is quite different. The sleep sofa has matured into a well-designed and functionally sound unit for sleeping and for sitting.

Now the style trend is to hide the hidden function. Details seen only in regular upholstered pieces are common—such as exposed wood trim, large brass ball casters, quilted upholstery, luxurious down filling in the seat and pillow backs, and a wide selection of decorator-type fabrics. The mechanism that converts the sofa to a sleeper has been engineered to give freer movement, yet not be seen.

Furniture manufacturers have realized the need for dual purpose furnishings in today's more open-planned homes. Many who have never considered manufacturing such a unit have come out with a wide selection of daybeds, sofa beds and trundles to choose from. On these six pages, we show you examples of the newest in sleep sofas.

How Public Should the Front Entrance Be?

You don't need a moat and a portcullis to assure a truly private entrance

By MADELAINE THATCHER

● Your house is really an expression of what you yourself are. If you entertain frequently and lavishly for dozens of people, your front entrance will probably be a residential version of a hotel marquee, for its purpose will be similar.

If you are not so interested in making a big public statement, and your home is a secluded place where you go to relax with your family and a few friends, your front entrance will probably be unostentatious. Whatever its character, the guest entrance of your home should be planned for the considerate welcoming of visitors.

Probably you will have another kind of entrance for family arrival, where it will be easy to carry in purchases from the car or books from the school bus. This approach need not be unattractive, but its purpose is quite a different one.

Of course, you want people to enjoy your home, but it may be better theater to preserve its mystery by a gradual unveiling of its charms. A change of levels, a winding walk, or a screen of planting will give your entrance the same sense of reticence that has always characterized so many of our truly great houses.

Here are some of the skillful ways in which private front entrances have been achieved in modest and in more imposing homes.

An entrance recessed behind a colonnade

On an exposed site where there are no variations in the terrain, an interesting, dark accent was introduced into the façade of the house by recessing the broad entrance loggia under the sheltering roof with a procession of square white columns accenting the welcome shade. The tall, imposing doors are dramatized by their setting and also by the broad sweep of tile paving across which they are approached by the arriving automobiles.

Welcome shadow of a canopy and a grille-shaded garden

A distinguished house set in ample grounds can benefit, as this one did, from a deliberately unostentatious entrance. Most of the fine shade trees were saved in the laying out of the drive and parking area. Their shadows do much to soften the silhouette of a long, low, flat-roofed house. The roof is extended to form a canopy over the walk from the drive to the interestingly patterned front door. The walk is sheltered on one side by a pierced concrete grille of sufficient depth to conceal the entrance garden that flanks the walk on the other side. This hidden garden is a delightful surprise for the visitor as he approaches the house.

An entrance is especially vulnerable when it faces a city street and doubly so when it is set in a glass wall. This problem was admirably solved here by using a double front walk that divides around a walled water garden topped by a trellis that successfully conceals the doorway. This pool of water lilies, invisible from the street, gives the viewer inside the entrance hall the kind of charmed intimate vista which one so seldom encounters in an approach to a town house.

Trellised fence turns city front yard into entrance court

If the owners of this house had been of an ostentatious turn of mind, they would have insisted that their attractive house be visible from the street. Fortunately, they valued privacy rather than public admiration. By enclosing the street side of their property with a fence of vertical louvers topped by a trellis, they gained not only a private entrance court but an enchanting covered walk to their terrace. This enclosure makes every bit of their street-front property enjoyable. A lockable front gate is a comforting asset now made practical by modern intercom systems that allow you to select your visitors remotely.

An entrance that is not a front door

Here is an example of a truly private entrance set in a house that turns a noncommittal face to the street, only hinting by its charming walled forecourt at the pleasant gardens concealed within the house. The entrance door, which is in a narrow link connecting the front and rear portions of the house, is some forty-two feet back from the street, reached via a tree-shaded walk. A trellised entrance court at right angles to the walk makes it impossible to see the entrance from the street. In this plan you are welcomed into the very heart of the house itself.

A sheltered entrance in a motor court

It is not unusual to find a house that is built around a motor court which provides all the street parking for a number of cars. The problem of providing a secluded front entrance in such a condition calls for real ingenuity. In this house, the front door is well to the side of the court under the deep roof overhang. It is shaded by vines and concealed from the street by a parasol-shaped tree, a nice hint of privacy in a machine age.

An island of planting conceals telltale parked cars

How often droppers-by say, "We saw your car and thought we'd stop in!" That is just fine if you are yearning for company, but not fine at all if you are taking a nap, expecting invited guests, or enjoying being alone. In the photograph above, you will see how an ingeniously placed island of planting located in the entrance drive successfully conceals the garage, as well as the cars parked in the motor court. A curved wrought-iron fence follows the oval of the island. Against the fence are massed the shrubs that form the screen. Entrance to the house is modestly placed in a corner of the arched porte-cochere.

Changes of level and direction

The natural advantages of the site have been successfully exploited in this guest approach to a house well concealed from the street by mature trees and skillful planting. From the guest parking area on the street, a few broad steps lead to an intermediate level, and from there the house is not yet visible. Another flight of steps and a change of direction in the walk reveal new vistas, till front door comes into view, set well back in angle of the house under shelter of the wide overhang.

Rare Quality on the Open Market

● Something special distinguishes the furniture on these four pages. Called the Sequent Group, manufactured by Henredon Furniture Industries, Inc., it is new, designed and engineered to fill the aesthetic and practical needs of modern living in form, scale, and usability.

But its newness isn't all the news. Looking at it, you sense that every one of these pieces has a certain uncommon character, the sort of thing you recognize in a recherché antique, a look of one-of-a-kindness and timeless urbanity that distinguishes the heirloom furniture in great museum houses. It has the same air of substance and deceptive simplicity as a couturier dress—its quiet perfection depends upon all sorts of hidden intricacies of design and craftsmanship. Only furniture that has been worked in the hands of a master cabinetmaker usually boasts such fine matching of wood grain, such precise joinings, such patina.

PHOTOGRAPH OPPOSITE BY WESLEY BALZ

What is revealed in this furniture is quality—and the kind of quality that used to be available to relatively few people. It could be seen only in “closed showrooms”—places you could not visit without a decorator—or it might be specially ordered through the decorating department of a store. Now you need go no farther afield to find these pieces than to a good furniture store or department store. It is, so to speak, quality on the open market, and at a price more people can afford.

The most reassuring thing about this quality furniture is that it is being made in an era frequently criticized for the lack of quality in its machine-made merchandise. Like most furniture today, it is indeed machine-made, although finished by hand. But it is so knowingly designed and executed by experienced woodworkers that it has all the earmarks of the handcrafted. (Please turn the page)

On every level—material, design, workmanship—quality has gone into this furniture. Woods are Carpathian elm veneer and walnut, contrasted to bring out the character of each wood's grain.

For all its simplicity of appearance, the design is suave, ingenious. Look at the base of the table opposite, shown in a library. Would you guess that the "gathered" legs and diamond-shape stretchers were a device to permit the table to extend to an 82-inch dining surface? The four center legs remain stationary, while the table top and end legs pull open to hold two extension leaves. In any use, the table is a gracefully scaled silhouette. Look, too, at such details as the lotus-carved table base on page 228, at the subtly rounded, faceted legs of the desk above, and at the sculptural forms of the arms on the chairs.

There are refinements of design and finish in every piece—in the radial-matching of veneers on table tops, in their beveled edges, in the joined arc-shape sides of a circular book table.

Such quality can be fully appreciated only when you see its tangible reality, when you can touch its smooth surfaces and closely peruse its workmanship. The best news of all is that you can do just that, now that you can easily find it in a furniture or department store.

Hi Fi that Doubles as Furniture

There is a growing trend toward hi-fi cabinets

By CARROLL CALKINS

● The logic of double-duty Hi Fi is inescapable. If you want a high-quality radio-phonograph, and also need a coffee table, secretary, or room divider, it makes great sense to combine the two in one piece of furniture. When you buy one piece with two functions, instead of two separate pieces, you save money and you save space in your house.

Most manufacturers of this kind of equipment are currently producing rather "universal" designs that will live comfortably with a variety of furniture styles. But there are a few who now offer many styles, particularly in coffee tables. As the trend toward (Please turn to page 288)

How To GIVE A BIRTHDAY PARTY

...if there is absolutely no way out

By DOROTHY MOLYNEAUX

● All parents have children. All children have birthdays. Therefore, following the lines of reasoning laid down by the ancient Greek philosophers: All parents have children with birthdays.

My own children are ten, nine, eight, seven, and five years of age. Even if you don't have the same number or the same ages, you have the same problems.

Suppose you are in the kitchen minding your own business. Your pre-schooler comes in from outside. He has been playing with his little friends. One of them is a blabbermouth.

"Mommy," says your little fellow, thoughtfully rubbing his grimy hands over your freshly scrubbed cabinets. "Stevie asked me if I'm going to have a birthday party. Am I, Ma? Am I? Am I?"

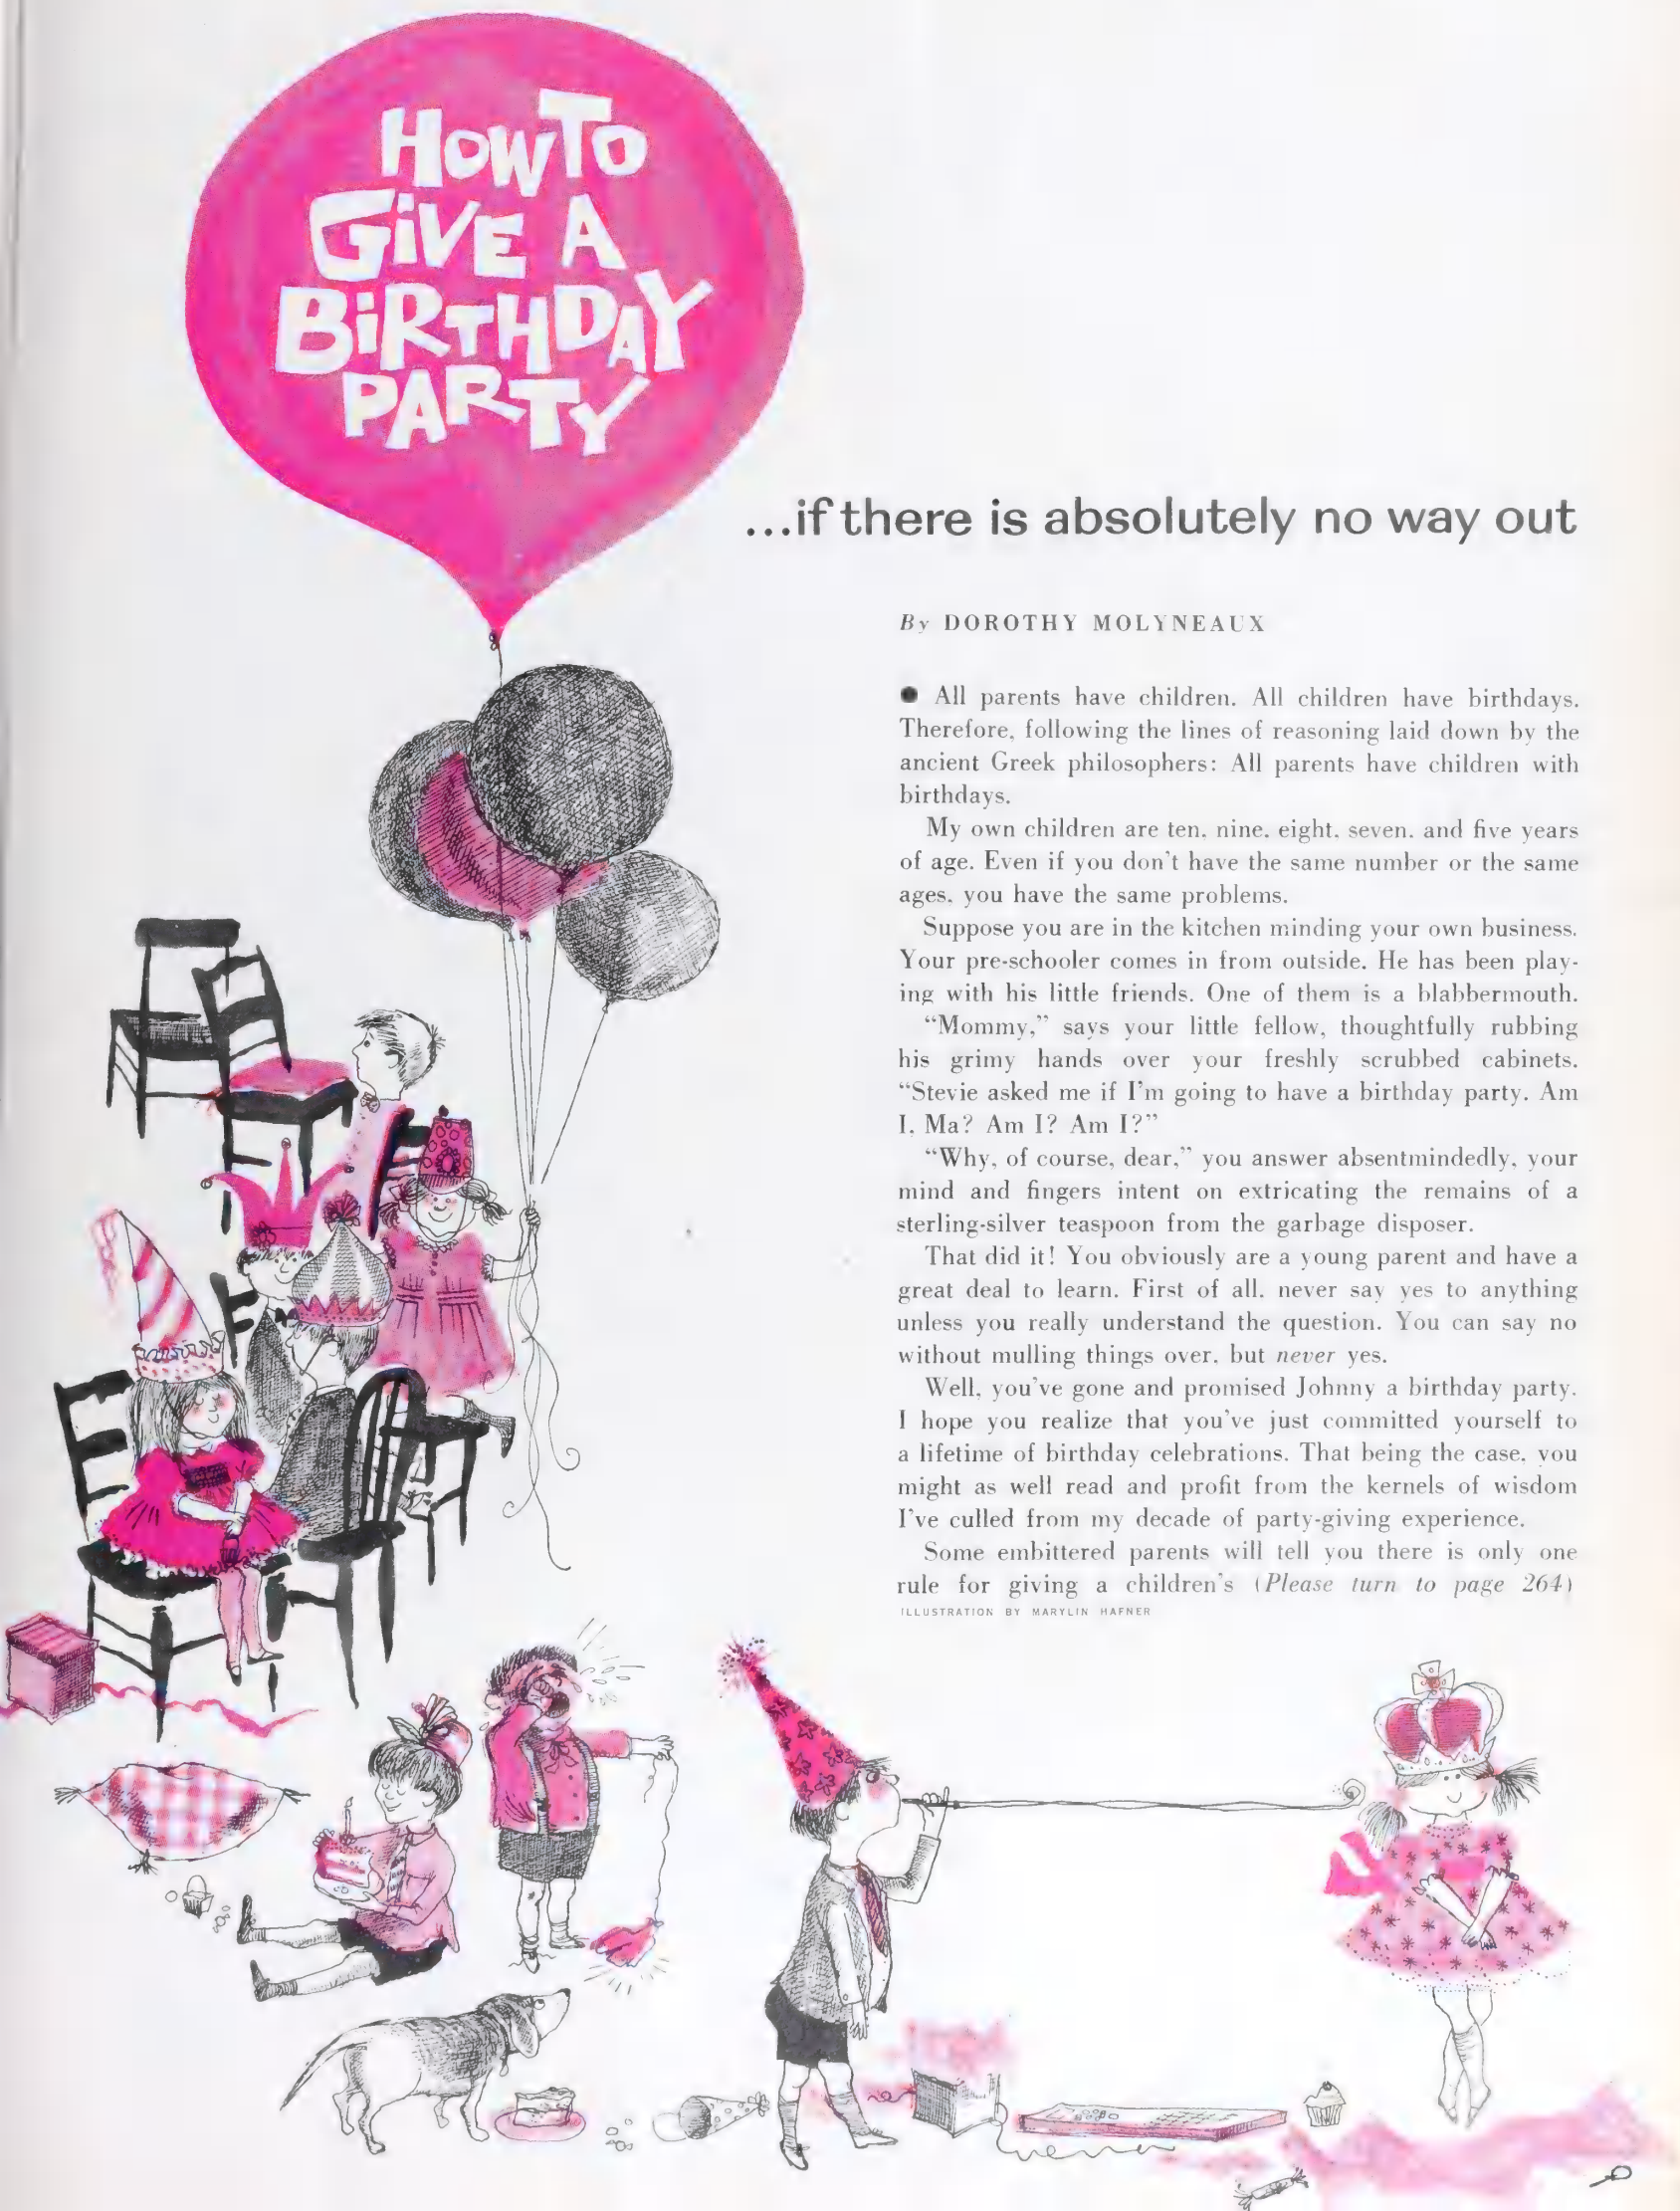

"Why, of course, dear," you answer absentmindedly, your mind and fingers intent on extricating the remains of a sterling-silver teaspoon from the garbage disposer.

That did it! You obviously are a young parent and have a great deal to learn. First of all, never say yes to anything unless you really understand the question. You can say no without mulling things over, but never yes.

Well, you've gone and promised Johnny a birthday party. I hope you realize that you've just committed yourself to a lifetime of birthday celebrations. That being the case, you might as well read and profit from the kernels of wisdom I've culled from my decade of party-giving experience.

Do you know the uniquely American wine—Zinfandel?

By DR. MAYNARD A. AMERINE

Department of Viticulture and Oenology, University of California

America has several wines that are distinctly American in development, but the one made from the Zinfandel grape is the one you'll meet the most often

● There is a wine, for those who care to look, made from a grape grown in only one area of the world—California. It is a wine richly red, with a frank and fruity flavor like none other, a wine with illusive fragrance hinting softly of raspberries fresh from the bush. With all this, a wine that ages better than many. It is the Zinfandel.

There is mystery about its beginnings. This much is known: It came from Europe, because it is of the classic wine grape family called Vitis vinifera, a family far different from the native American Vitis labrusca with its slipskins. But the Zinfandel is not grown in Europe now; not even the name is known there. It grows only in California.

Tradition has it that the ebullient Hungarian nobleman, Colonel Agoston Haraszthy, brought it to California more than 100 years ago. Whether that is true or whether it already had been brought in and Haraszthy only reimported it, the Zinfandel has repeated the story of many another immigrant.

From uncertain and humble beginnings, it has advanced to its own singular position among the world's finest wines. Even so, Zinfandel is a sturdy fellow. For all the aristocrats in its line, it was and is the work horse of the California red-wine industry. It can sit in the limousine or it can pull the plow. Connoisseurs exclaim over its ruby-red color, a quality it achieves because in either cool or warm years it ripens well. Its wines have a full but sharp red tint. For all of its color qualities the flavor and aroma are perhaps more striking. Many grapes produce a wine with a mild taste that is difficult to recognize. Not so the Zinfandel. It is perhaps the most easily recognizable of the red dinner wines.

BUT HOW does it taste? The description has been attempted many times. The only sure way is to taste it yourself. "Berry," "raspberry," or "fruitlike"—all these are used. So is "aromatic." "Delicate and velvety to the palate," wrote a California wine taster in 1882. Philip M. Wagner, editor of the Baltimore Sun and a vigneron in his own right, once described Zinfandel as having a "delicious and peculiar 'sweet' bouquet, good body, and excellent flavor." Scientists at Cal Tech have analyzed its aroma without being able to discover its illusive secret.

But that doesn't matter; whatever compound or compounds perfume it. Zinfandel is welcome in this world where too many products taste the same. No other wine is like it.

It may have been this New World wine of which John Keats dreamed when he wrote: "If you could make some wine like Claret, to drink on summer evenings in an arbor! For really 'tis so fine—it fills one's mouth with a gushing freshness—then goes down cool and feverless—then you do not feel it quarreling with your liver—no, it is rather a Peacemaker, and lies as quiet as it did in the grape: then it is as fragrant as the Queen Bec, and the more ethereal Part of it mounts into the brain, not assaulting the cerebral apartments like a bully in a badhouse looking for his trull and hurrying from door to door and bounding against the wainscot, but rather walks like Aladdin about his enchanted palace so gently that you do not feel his step."

The Hungarian Haraszthy was not the only European gentleman of renown to respect the Zinfandel. The pianist and president of Poland, Ignace Jan Paderewski, planted 300 acres of land near Paso Robles, California to Zinfandel vines during the 1920's. Even during prohibition, the Paderewski Zinfandel grapes were prized and brought good prices. His vineyard still stands and bears quality grapes for a different owner. Mr. Paderewski is reported to have been greatly pleased by Zinfandel wines from his own grapes.

The best guess on Zinfandel's origin is that it was brought to California from Europe in the 1840's and '50's, even though the story runs that Haraszthy deserves all the credit. Certainly the Zinfandel was popularized by Haraszthy. He planted it first in San Francisco and south of the city, but the climate was too cool.

In 1857 Colonel Haraszthy purchased land northeast of the town of Sonoma and transplanted Zinfandel vines to that more favorable climate. They flourished, and in 1862 produced two casks which were probably California's first Zinfandel table wine. Its closest European counterpart today, Zierfandler, is a red variety of German origin that differs in many respects. Possibly a label was misplaced, and Zinfandel emerged as the best approximation?

FROM SOME such early importation, the Zinfandel was rapidly acclimatized, particularly to the area north of San Francisco. By 1884 almost two-thirds of the vineyard acreage of California was planted to Zinfandel. Its vines were so much better than those of the previously planted Mission grape that it rapidly became, and remains, California's most popular red-wine grape.

Today more than 25,000 acres of Zinfandel grapes are planted in the state, the largest planting of any single variety of red grapes. At one time, in 1936, there were over 53,000 acres of Zinfandel grapes in California.

The annual production of this acreage is over 70,000 tons of grapes, or more than 10,000,000 gallons of wine. Not all of this is bottled and called a varietal Zinfandel. The rest is blended with other red wines and sold as "Napa Claret," "Sonoma Burgundy," "Mountain Red," etc. Several of the premium producers in California use all of their Zinfandel grapes in these blends. Limited amounts of straight Zinfandel, some of very good quality, are sold locally by small producers from the cooler areas of the state. Some experts have compared the wine of Zinfandel to certain Italian wines. They are partially right, if they refer to the fruity, tart flavor. When made under good conditions, Zinfandel does make a fruity wine but there is no Italian wine with the special aroma of Zinfandel. The only wine type that has a similar aroma and fruity flavor might be Beaujolais, and this is certainly only remotely comparable. Zinfandel wines also sometimes resemble certain Italian red wines when the after-taste is compared. When young, Zinfandel wines may have a lack of softness which reminds one of the Italian wines. Today, however, it is rare for a rough or coarse Zinfandel wine to reach the national market. The products of a few small wineries that are distributed only in California occasionally show this coarseness. (Please turn to page 277)

How to take the boxiness out of a box

Adding architectural amenities will help you find that your apartment (or home) is the calling box of hundreds just like it

Most renters of modern apartments are faced with the problem of trying to put character into an anonymous box. Trying to get individuality just by the use of portable furnishings never quite works, for the box is still there. And the floor planning of apartments being what it is, it is usually an awkward box—too long in one dimension and not wide enough in another.

But dull and ordinary space can emerge as something better than rubber-stamp and anonymous if it is approached first as architecture. Small, not-too-expensive things can be added to the structure, so contrived as to add character. Such changes should shift attention from the basic box to refinements in woodwork and cabinetry. Other changes can be made through wall finishes, so the standard finish is not seen everywhere. Built-ins, custom-built to fit that particular spot, probably make the best contribution. And often they do not actually have to be attached to the structure, so they can be moved when the renter moves.

effective additions. These rooms seem much wider and brighter and less confining.

The architectural thinking began at the entrance. A foyer, vague in its boundaries, was more clearly defined by the addition of a grille that separates the entry from the living room. And this grille also doubles as a backing for a book-case and a drop-leaf table (photographs above).

One large window wall in the living room was changed from being a wall with a glazed hole in it into one total composition. This was done by framing the whole wall in choice wood. As a result, cove lighting became possible, and a wall-to-wall counter replaced the not-so-very-useful window sill. The window itself was made more interesting by hanging glass collages against the glass, so it no longer

The plan indicates how uninteresting is the ordinary apartment space. Corners, walls, and windows were made interesting with built-ins that add considerable architectural character missing before. Color areas in all plans indicates additions.

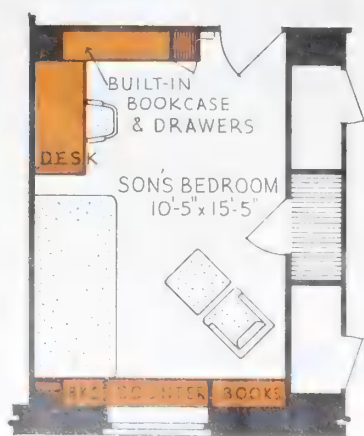

A center for study was created in the smaller of two bedrooms. It is packed with utility and nearly becomes a room within a room. Deep shelves store a large collection of books, a high-fidelity system, and a generous supply of phonograph records. The base includes three spacious drawers for clothing. The end support of this unit is a vertical closet. The top of the unit is extended over the doorway, knitting the whole wall together. The only window in the room (seen in the photograph at the right) is framed like the one in the living room, creating a counter and side supports for the bookshelves.

What the new Snow Blowers can do for you

By DAVID X. MANNERS AND CARROLL C. CALKINS

● A snow blower clears snow ten to twenty times as fast as a shovel and with infinitely less effort. Now is the time to get one. If you wait till December, they'll be all picked over and the best ones gone. You want your snow blower on hand before the first snow comes. In some areas that may be soon—sooner than you like to think.

Snow blowers range in price from about $100 to $400. You have to pay at least $175 to get one with enough power to do a heavy job. But even with these, you have a feeling the manufacturer is strongly aware of economics and could do better if his budget weren't restricted. For $275 you can get a machine that is really solidly made, with no compromises. Even at that price, it's a lot less than the cost of a heart attack. And it can be a lot less than the monetary losses involved in being snowbound.

A blower works so quickly and easily you'll use yours to clear walks, terraces and other areas you normally don't clear. Typically, an 18" blower (one that clears an 18" swath) will clear a one-foot fall from 100' of driveway ten feet wide in under ten minutes. Under ideal conditions, it can dispose of 14,000 cubic feet of snow in an hour.

Snow blowers are as easy to use as power lawn mowers. Many women handle mowers, and they are equally competent to handle blowers. Almost all blowers have shielded engines or specially winterized ignition systems so that they start promptly, even if stored in unheated space. An electric type is available. It is of low power, clears only about as fast as a snow shovel, and then only if snow is dry. But it is far less effort to use than a snow shovel.

Dry snow is easy for any snow blower. This is when they throw the 20' to 30' claimed for them. (Some claim to 50'.) It's when snow gets wet that the real test comes. In rough going, the throw may be reduced to three to five feet, or less. Ice and snow may frequently choke up the exit spout and require clearing. That's why horsepower is so important. The more horsepower, the more force behind the throw. The spout won't be as likely to clog, and you'll throw a maximum distance. In clearing wide areas, such as a motor court, if the blower doesn't throw the snow far enough it may be necessary to move it in two or more operations, throwing it part of the required distance each time.

To gain greater thrust, some blowers have an ejector fan in the exit spout. It gives the snow an extra boost. These are known as two-stage blowers. Most blowers are only one-stage. But other factors than whether a blower has one or two stages determine how far it will throw. Most important is its horsepower and how wide a swath it cuts in relation to its horsepower.

For any heavy snow-throwing, you need at least three horsepower and a machine that will cut an 18" swath. You can get a machine like this for about $175. The 18" swath permits clearing an average sidewalk in two passes. If you have heavy falls and extensive blowing to do, you will want a four- or six-horsepower machine (about $275). It takes at least this size to get anywhere with a real snowbank. You must also have a machine that is self-propelled. Some smaller machines are hand-propelled; you have to push them into the snow. They are only for light duty and occasional use.

Some blowers have cleat wheels that dig nicely into ice or snow and give excellent traction. They are especially good on gravel driveways, where you aren't going to clear down to the gravel. Heavy machines have enough traction even with rubber-tired wheels, and the tires offer smoother operation on paved surfaces. In rough, icy going, you can put chains on the tires. Some have quickly interchangeable steel wheels to improve ease of operation under extreme conditions; there are also counterweight accessories to improve traction. You can remove snow from gravel driveways, though you are likely to throw a few stones. Many machines have adjustable clearance, some to three inches or more.

Some blowers have no means of stopping the rotating snow-gathering mechanism without shutting off the engine. This is a disadvantage. Big machines have a reverse gear, which is necessary for maneuvering. Smaller machines are easier to maneuver and a reverse isn't essential. Smaller machines (under 150 lbs.) are easy to load on the tailgate of a station wagon, and transport. This may help a high-school boy in using a machine to earn money—five dollars an hour or more is not unusual.

snow shovel

Compact, lightweight electric snow blower doesn't clear snow much faster than a shovel, but it requires no muscle. Wife or young son can do it. Grounded cord makes it completely safe, even in slush and sleet.

Some have other attachments

Some multipurpose garden tools mow grass as well as blow snow. Above, you see the same power unit being used to clear snow (left), and, with a sickle bar attachment (right), to cut tall grass and tough weeds.

You can blow snow where you please

Most blowers, by a simple shift, as shown above, allow you to throw snow to either right or left. Some have spouts that revolve, so that you can direct snow exactly where you want it. It's often convenient to be able to throw snow straight ahead. A few low-cost machines will blow snow only in one direction. This is a distinct disadvantage when clearing wide areas.

EMBOSSING

the new easy way to make holiday decorations

There's time to produce sumptuous bedazzlement between now and the holiday season

By PHOEBE HYDE

● This is the simplest craft art imaginable, but it produces a richness far beyond the usual bauble-making of Christmas time. The merest trifle ends up looking splendid—because the act of embossing produces so many planes for the light to refract off the base metal.

The material that produces such Renaissance richness is called base metal, and in gold has the color of true 24-carat gold. It really is a metal that resembles foil, but behaves differently than foil. Because it is only .003 gauge in thickness, it can be raised in relief by the moderate pressure of a not-too-sharp point (as on a blunt pencil). This raising is like a bulging or swelling, for the base metal actually stretches as lines are embossed on it. The piece curls as you draw on it.

So if you want the finished article to be flat, you draw on both sides about equally, thus getting both raised and sunken lines. If you want the finished thing to curl (as with the leaves), work entirely on one side.

The more lines you draw, the more rich sparkle and glitter is produced, for you are creating more planes from which the light will be refracted. You are, in truth, changing a completely flat sheet into a three-dimensional article.

The only tools needed are scissors, a blunt point as on a dull pencil, Duco cement, and a stapler. The base metal can be ordered by mail in a kit containing 36 pieces (8½" by 12") in six colors and gold. (The backs of all pieces are silver-colored, so you have eight colors to play with.) # The Mysterious Allure of Grilles

By CURTIS BESINGER

At the present moment, grilles, as one of the current fads, are being indiscriminately used as architectural "slip covers"—as a means of concealing old buildings and giving them a seeming newness and modernity.

However, the secret to the long-lasting allure of grilles, a secret not realized in their present use as cover-ups, lies not in the fact that they cover up but, on the contrary, that they partially reveal. For some reason—perhaps it is inherent in the natural curiosity of the human species—the thing that is only partially revealed is the thing we find most interesting and exciting.

Grilles, as a kind of veil, make it possible for us to reveal while concealing and to do it architecturally. But intriguing the curiosity and stirring the imagination is not the only use of grilles. This is merely a side benefit, an extra dividend that results from their practical purposes.

The examples shown here are all illustrations of contemporary uses, but grilles have appeared with infinite variety in almost all cultural eras and in all of the historical ways of building. And they have been executed in a great many materials: wood, bronze, wrought and cast iron, terra cotta. (More photographs overleaf. Text continues on page 288)

To screen the main entrance area from the auto court at the left, and to provide a support and background for the planting, Architect John F. Galbraith has used grillework made of masonry units in this house for Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Weeks.

For a crisply tailored light-softening device—and one that won't be blown about by the wind—Architect Albert Ely Ives used finely scaled wooden grilles in place of sheer curtains in this bedroom in the Hawaii home of Mrs. Richard A. Cook.

To free the furniture arrangement within this apartment living room from the pattern suggested by its construction, Designer William Pahlmann used Moroccan screens to qualify the space, reshaping it and giving it an air of richness and mystery.

To give a balanced symmetry to dissimilar elements—one a passage to a bedroom, the other a storage cabinet—fine-scale grillework doors, appropriate to both functions, were placed in openings at the sides of the fireplace in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Allen Adler in California.

To admit light and air and to suggest the separation from the adjoining courtyard, a bold-patterned grille, designed to be in scale with big coarse-leaved planting that is seen through it, was used in the Hana Maui Hotel in Hawaii. As is seen here, a grille can be designed so that it cannot be seen through when viewed from oblique angles. Albert Ely Iyes, architect.

The New Antiques

It takes time before the everyday furniture of a period can truly be evaluated. Only now are we looking at 19th-century American pieces as objects of value. A new generation—who never knew these pieces as grandparents' furniture—sees their beauty

By GEORGE GROTZ

Author of "The Furniture Doctor" and "From Gunk to Glow"

■ What are the new antiques? They are not the priceless works of art—the $3,500 Chippendale secretary and its cousins—that have been sought for so many years by collectors. The new antiques are the kind of pieces that come up at country auctions, the ones you find in out-of-the-city antique shops. They were almost all made after 1830 and might generally be called Victorian, except that most people think of Victorian as a single style, and these pieces range through a variety of styles.

This furniture has been zooming in popularity (and in price) in the last thirty years. And it still has a long way to go—in popularity and price—for two reasons: first, because it reminds us all of days gone by and the way things were. Second, because this furniture was designed and made in America and is part of our struggle to get out from under the cultural influence of Europe.

The furniture that came out of this period resulted from many conflicting forces at work in this country. Americans of the 1800's were starting out afresh in a new country and were the first people in history to build a country with power tools. Yet there was a conflict between designing for machine production and the desire to reproduce the designs and styles of the past. Basically, the landed gentry stuck to the old designs because they had the strongest ties with the Old World—and they could afford handmade things. But the common people were too busy building railroads and setting the West to be well educated to the European taste.

The result of this conflict between the handmade tradition and the influence of mechanization was that the Victorian era started out with direct imitations of European styles. The curvy, grape-decorated parlor furniture was directly from Louis XV. The Hitchcock chairs were merely Sheraton side chairs, modified for mass production and colorfully decorated to appeal to the simple farm wives to whom they were sold. But gradually the influence of the machine was felt through Gothic, the squared-up Eastlake (decorations glued on), into the simplicity of Golden Oak and Mission.

Structurally, Victorian furniture was made right. It was built to be used and to last. It was the expression of a people who knew exactly who they were and where they were going, who never doubted that the world belonged to them and that they would succeed in making it over in their own image.

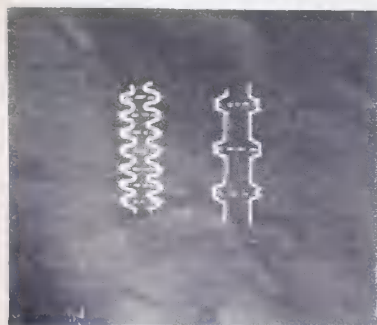

The woods used in this furniture varied from the beginning of the era, when, still under the French influence, mahogany reigned supreme, through a middle period when walnut and then cherry were popular, to the final days when oak came into its own. Throughout, of course, pine was the choice for the low-priced, mass-produced furniture.

Here, roughly classified, are styles of American furniture that cover this period. (Prices given are average retail prices in reasonably successful antique shops in the northeastern U.S. They will vary somewhat according to location.)

Spool

Mass-produced furniture began with Spool design. It was made in almost every wood available and stained to look like mahogany, the popular wood of Europe. Better pieces used maple, cherry, whitewood, walnut. Cheaper pieces used pine, often painted.

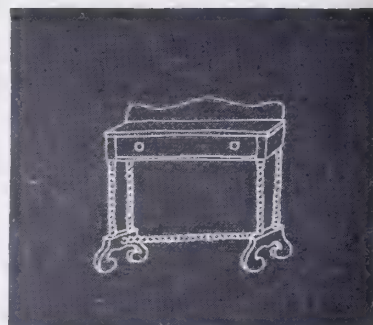

The fast-operating, multiple-blade lathe used for making turnings for buttons (left) and spools (right) was the inspiration for the first mass-produced furniture. Only a larger lathe was needed to start a new era.

The earliest Spool furniture had simple, straight lines. Beds usually were made of pine and sold by mail order. In its original (painted) finish, $75-125. Taken down and refinished in natural wood, another $40.

Curved-corner pieces all date from after 1850. Most of these later beds were of hardwoods, stained, and are hard to refinish because stain seeped deep into end grain. In the rough, this is worth $50; refinished, $85.

Pieces like this simple washstand were of solid pine and made throughout the period, with only minor variations in design and workmanship. Would be classed as Cottage, except for legs. In original paint, $12 to $20.

Fancy Chairs

In the early 1800's, the Windsor chair fell from popularity. It was replaced by what came to be called the Fancy Chair. Though many styles were made, the field was dominated by Lambert Hitchcock, the father of mass production and national distribution.

The most popular style of the Hitchcock chair is this highly decorated, rush-seat chair. It is called "the pillow back," after the block of wood in the middle of the turning at the top. In fine condition, worth $70.

So-called "Boston" rocker was similar to Hitchcock chair in both superb construction and stenciled designs. Many woods were used in each chair, each the right type for the job it was to do. In good condition, $40.

This chair is typical of chairs similar to the Hitchcock chair in decoration and construction, but fancier. They are worth less than Hitchcock chairs today but will be worth more because of their rarity. About $30.

The popular bamboo-turned chair was an offshoot of Spool furniture. The wood was maple or other light-colored hardwood, finished with light stain, often gilded or painted in a fancy way. In good condition, $15.

Cottage

Mass-produced, low-priced Cottage furniture filled the need of a growing middle class. Usually made of pine, painted and decorated, it was sturdy, long-lived. Today, scraped and stained antique brown, it provides a vast supply of ersatz Early American.

Connecticut dry sink is a typical example of Cottage furniture. Top was used to hold a dishwashing pan. The basin area was almost always lined with galvanized tin, or even copper. In the rough, worth as much as $35.

This is not a captain's chair but an office chair. The curved back is not of sawed pine but of bent wood, usually hickory. The rest is ordinary oak. Worth far less than an early handmade captain's chair. About $16.

Table-desk derived from higher-class Empire style, but made in pine or cherry (oak in later versions). Writing surface folds up and locks. Top is removable for easier transporting. In good condition, about $45.

This early settie has pine seat and back, maple arms, and ash spokes, is easy to pass off as Early American. Refinished, about $60; rough, $30. When wood is mostly oak, the piece is much later and worth, in rough, $25.

Empire

Empire originated as a French reaction to effeminate, overdecorated aristocratic styles. As brothers in revolution, Americans went along until the French reverted to their curlicues. Our puritan background resisted, so our Empire pieces are much simpler.

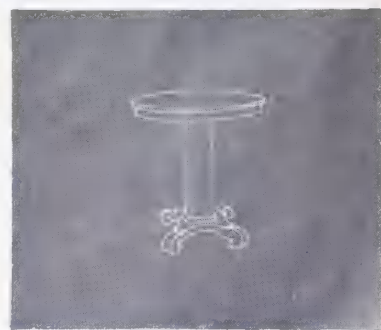

Ponderous but gracefully curved sections of this typical Empire couch were cut out of great blocks of pine veneer which were glued mahogany veneers. (Early Empire pieces were of solid mahogany.) Good condition, $95.

A typical chair of the Empire period, pure in style. The curved back is mahogany, with figured mahogany veneer glued on the face. The seat lifts out, making it easy to re-cover. Nicely refinished, it is worth about $35.

The Empire chest of drawers or bureau had the same massive but graceful air as the couch. Even the drawers are made of chunks of pine covered with mahogany veneers. Only the top is solid. In good condition, $35.

Small pedestal table shows essentially simple lines of Empire. Like other pieces, it is primarily mahogany-veneered pine. The scarcity of mahogany (all imported) kept use of solid pieces to minimum. About $25.

Louis XV

Overlapping (but mostly following) Empire, Louis XV furniture marked a movement away from starkness and simplicity. Although the American versions were more simplified, they bore the basic earmarks—curves, finger moldings, grape leaves.

Anyone who thinks that a Louis XV sofa isn't a thing of beauty is a hard case indeed. Many variations of this sofa are around. This one, if it is reupholstered in material of reasonable quality, today is worth about $185.

The Sleepy Hollow chair, as it has come to be called, originated in this period as a new piece of furniture. It was picked up by designers under English influence. In rough, $35; reglued, refinished, reupholstered, $80.

Classic chair of the period is somewhat straighter of line but still carries the basic curves and a grape bunch at the top of the back. Sometimes the back was upholstered. In either case, it is worth around $30 in the rough.

Footstools were very popular during this era, and ones like this are still highly valued today. Here we see how the American version used just the essentials for simplicity. With good original upholstery, worth about $15.

Baroque

The ornate, ostentatious furniture derived from Louis XV, now classed as Baroque, became popular with the wealthy.

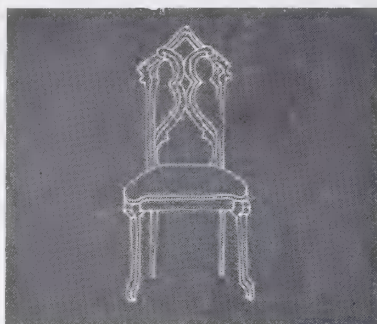

The aristocrat of Victorian, a chair made by the biggest producer, John Henry Belter, can be worth as much as $300, restored. However, these are rarely seen in antique shops; dealers take them straight to the collectors.

This finely carved mahogany couch proves that all Baroque means in terms of American Victorian furniture is fanciness, a degenerate ostentation based on Louis XV. A piece like this is worth over $300, reupholstered.

Gothic

With Gothic furniture, the tide turned from French to English influence. Mainly responsible: Andrew Jackson Downing.

The English-influenced Gothic furniture was more practical, more useful, more lasting, and better designed for its purpose than the French-influenced designs. This chair is quite rare; a set of four might cost as much as $160.

One of the finest pieces of Victorian furniture, this Gothic secretary was so early that it doesn't quite have the flavor of the other new antiques. It is more a parent to the styles that followed later. About $150 to $200.

Renaissance

In the era of Byron and other romantic poets, the British discovered Italian Renaissance designs. Americans followed, for after the Civil War they wanted something less austere. Romanticism set back functionalism, but not for long.

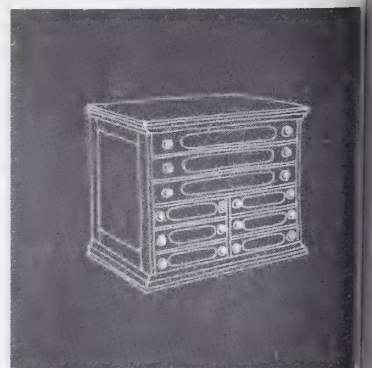

Fancy bureaus had beadrop pulls and sometimes carved handles. Small shelves on either side of the mirror were used for candles. Tops were of white marble. Not many found in shops because of large size. About $60.

While walnut was definitely the wood of this period, rockers like these were often made of mahogany. Originally upholstered with horsehair, a good one upholstered in reasonably good material is worth as much as $70.

Solid walnut and beautiful workmanship are used in this marble-top table, the most popular piece of all Victorian furniture. The price has risen in value the last 15 years until one like this is worth at present as much as $65.

Originally the sewing cabinet was used in dry-goods stores and carried advertising on the drawer panels. Solid walnut with turned walnut pulls—it is fascinating to everyone. $25 slightly higher if advertising is intact.

Eastlake

With the growing ornateness of Renaissance, a reaction set in—with Charles Lock Eastlake, who advocated fundamental shapes with straight lines. But the men with carving machines couldn't resist motifs; the era of bric-a-brac fretwork began.

The most Eastlake piece you can find this stand-up-to-it desk, or secretary. Its construction is oak, with burl and nut veneer on the raised paneling. Currently valued at about $75, it is certainly destined to rise in value.

A classic Eastlake bed that is a drug on the market and probably always will be, for the same reason that the Renaissance beds are: too big. Not found in antique shops, but in used-furniture places at about $5 to $10.

This is as close to a classic Eastlake chair as you can get. The chair is based on squares and rectangles, as opposed to circles and ovals. It still is stronger than any comparable chair you can buy today. Costs around $5.

Here is a good example of an Eastlake rocker that is still sturdy. This one has been in use for decades and will hold up for many more, due to its beautifully fitted parts. Either clean or refinished, it goes for $6.

A popular piece already is this Eastlake version of the Sleepy Hollow chair of the Louis XV period. Wood is machine-carved oak, though a few of walnut. Valued at around $35 with its original leather upholstery.

Eastlake also found its way into the plushier offices. This chair rises on a steel screw and tilts back on a spring movement. Piano chairs and stools were also made, but they did not tilt back. This one sells for around $12.

Although it looks like the later Mission, it preceded Mission by a decade. Back could be tilted backwards or forwards by moving a brass bar in notches cut in extensions of the arms. In oak, black leather cushions, $12.

Soon after the Civil War there developed a craze for lamps of all kinds—made of decorated milky glass and brass, cast iron, white glass and marble. This is one of the fancier versions, in glass and brass. About $125.

Jacobean

The Jacobean fad stemmed from the fact that during the basically Eastlake era one or more factories did turn out quite a few Jacobean chairs that were nearly exact copies of 17th-century English chairs. It was one part of the Romantic revival that never got far.

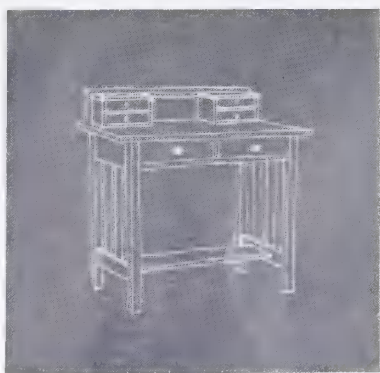

Jacobean chairs were quite faithful copies of the Jacobean style as it existed in Europe. This example is of solid oak, with only a light-stain. Seat and back were cane. Cost is around $30, recaned.

This chair is derivative of the Jacobean style, but it does get a little florid and Frenchy. Also the wood was mahogany, and instead of the usual caning the seat was inlaid with mother-of-pearl. Price today is about $20.

Mission

Just before the turn of the century, a reaction against the fussiness of the preceding decades set in. The country felt the need to return to simplicity and wholesomeness. Gustav Stickley, who designed bungalows, designed Mission furniture to go into them.

Mission furniture was simple, strong, functional, and ugly, but it must be said that it was a well-defined style and added to the growth of American taste in design. This solid oak desk, stained dark brown, is at present $15.

Heavy and solid are the best you can say about Mission furniture. Even the black leather cushions and pillows are still serviceable. When Mission "comes in," the oak may well be bleached; it will be called "Early Modern." $5. More New Antiques on page 286

How to make "French Dressing"

Before the real thing is gone and forgotten, and the language corrupted by pretenders masquerading as "French," read what a leading gourmet in France has to say

By WAVERLEY ROOT

● Many, many years ago I found myself escorting a young lady, newly arrived in the United States from France, at dinner in New England. The visitor spoke no English. Her hosts spoke no French. This allowed her, without rudeness, to pass on to me her impressions of American cooking. It was then that I realized for the first time how much sugar we use.

It was an elaborate dinner of many courses, and as each sweetened dish succeeded its predecessor, the French girl became more and more desperate. Smothered in a sea of sugar, yearning for a tart taste, she uttered a murmur of relief when a green salad appeared.

There was sugar in the salad dressing.

A year ago, returning to the United States for the first time in eleven years, salad dressing again impressed me. There was sugar in it, sometimes; sometimes not. But in restaurants everywhere, I was served an orange-colored liquid described as "French dressing," quite unknown to France. I was unable to discern by taste what made it that color. It looked like saffron, but obviously wasn't. I could have asked, but I didn't. I wasn't interested in reproducing it. I was going back to France, where my salads would be seasoned in authentic fashion, simply, without sophistication, saffron-colored or otherwise.

Note that I say "would be seasoned," not "would be served with French dressing." There is no salad dressing in France. If you serve hard-boiled eggs sprinkled with salt and pepper, you do not refer to the salt and pepper as an egg dressing. In France, when a salad is seasoned with these two plus oil and vinegar, the condiments are not separately called salad "dressing." (Please turn to page 258)

“Margaret Rudkin has written a cookbook as fresh and unconventional as her famous Pepperidge Farm® bread”

ANYONE who has ever tasted a slice of her Pepperidge Farm bread—that crusty, firm-textured, wonderfully nostalgic bread—knows that Margaret Rudkin doesn't just love food—she respects it.

And she has communicated her feeling for the dignity of good food in this wise and intensely personal cookbook.

Over 500 recipes— for eating and living

The Pepperidge Farm Cookbook is really three books in one. A working cookbook. A treasury of antique recipes, lovingly gathered over 25 years. And, popping up between the old recipes and the new, there is a charming autobiography.

Margaret Rudkin tells you about favorite foods of her childhood—flummery, fluffin, cocky-leek soup—and about the grandmother who made them for her.

She gives recipes from the country kitchen she knew as a young wife and mother—recipes for pumpkin bread, fried green tomatoes, hot sausage cream tart.

And she gives her own joyous (and highly successful) recipe for living.

Main courses, plain and fancy

Something for fun? Try Margaret Rudkin's recipe for Beef Stroganoff Without Panic.

For special occasions, try her two and one-half page recipe for Blanquette de Veau. Or Bombay Chicken, made with 21 ingredients. Or there is Marinated Duck (the preparation time is 32 to 40 hours).

For “just the family,” there are simple suppers like Tomato Cheese Pie, Top-Stove Shortribs (with apricots!), Boiled Beef with barley. For soup and sandwich dinners, there are sandwich ideas by the dozen and hearty, sustaining soups.

You can feed a hungry family on the rich

Beef-and-Vegetable Soup Margaret Rudkin remembers from childhood.

“My mother always hummed the recipe like a little tuneless song when she made it—

*“A shin of beef and bones
Pepper and salt and onions
Carrots and celery
Bay leaf and parsley
Leeks and potatoes
A can of tomatoes
And a handful of oatmeal to stick to your ribs.”*

Margaret Rudkin's own baking secrets

You will want to bake bread when you read Mrs. Rudkin's loving and easy-to-follow instructions.

The first bread baked at Pepperidge Farm—a hearty, nourishing whole wheat loaf—was for her own growing family:

“I was generous in my use of butter and milk, honey and molasses, and invented a recipe which resulted in a delicious bread, pleasant for anyone to eat without being told ‘eat it because it's good for you’.”

That recipe is used at Pepperidge Farm today.

Anyone who has ever tasted Pepperidge Farm Frozen Puff Pastry knows Margaret Rudkin has a genius for desserts. And she gives you her own recipes for everything from Plain Pastry with Butter, to Spanish Gato-Almond Cake.

“Quaking Pudding”—and 43 other antique recipes

If you are adventurous, dessert can be a “Quaking Pudding.” You will find the recipe, dated 1663, in Margaret Rudkin's chapter on “Cooking from Antique Cookbooks.”

Margaret Rudkin doesn't just collect antique recipes. She translates them for you into modern cooking terms.

With her as a guide, you can prepare “Chicken in a Pungent Sauce” from a recipe that originated in the first cookbook ever printed, in 1475.

You can “Make a Cake the Way of the Royal Princess, the Lady Elizabeth, Daughter to King Charles the First,” from a contemporary recipe.

Or “Preserve Bullasses Green as Grass”—a 17th century version of plum preserves.

450 pages; 420 illustrations

Seasoning is part of the salad. It has no name—in salad, that is. You may come across the same combination of ingredients presented separately in a sauce boat to go with, say, artichokes, or cold cauliflower, or leeks. Then it is vinaigrette. But with salad it is strictly anonymous.

Seasoning salad, in France, is so simple that few French women can tell you how they do it. The result is achieved by instinct. "You put in your ingredients," says my French mother-in-law, one of the finest cooks I know, "taste, and improve." She says this, however, about any dish for which she is asked her recipe. She has been tasting for nearly eighty years now, and knows therefore what you have to add to improve, and how much. Not many people do.

THE problem is also complicated by the fact that seasoning a salad, or any dish served with vinaigrette, is considered a highly personal matter, to be regulated by the consumer's private taste. Salad always comes to our table already seasoned; but vinaigrette is never made in the kitchen. It is a case of every man for himself. The salt, the pepper, the oil and vinegar are on the table. You concoct your own blend.

This would seem, therefore, to be an art within the reach of all. Yet I hear from American friends wails of despair about the difficulties of preparing in the United States a "French" dressing with the tang of the original on its native heath. This would be easier to comprehend with mayonnaise, a capricious concoction everywhere. My wife, for instance, maintains that she cannot make mayonnaise thicken in the presence of her mother, who apparently intimidates her. But that is another story.

About salad seasoning, all I can pass on to you is how I used to make it, with success, in Vermont, a far cry from France. I first shook into a saucer about as much salt as would be needed on a couple of hard-boiled eggs. I then shook over the salt the proportion of pepper that I would use for those two eggs. I then poured over this two tablespoons of olive oil and one tablespoon of vinegar.

The only possibility of doing anything wrong in this simple operation comes when you mix the whole together, trying to persuade the vinegar to blend more or less homogeneously with the oil, which it is temperamentally unwilling to do. I don't know whether mechanical mixers solve this problem, but I used a fork to beat the ingredients together.

The secret is not to mix with tips of the tines, but to press along their whole length, back down of course, firmly into the mixture, and rotate the fork while plying pressure to the saucer, as though you were trying to get lumps out of it. With the result, I flavored my salad, with a variably pleasing effect—aided, I doubt, by the fact that the lettuce had just been fresh-picked from my own garden.

My only variant from this formula was occasionally, in moments of recklessness, to add a minidab of mild mustard to the salt and pepper, pressing them together before adding the oil.

The two-to-one proportion of oil and vinegar, classic in France, often varied with the type of salad.

In France salad means, unless definitely specified otherwise, simply a green plant—whether lettuce or dandelion—and its seasoning. France does not go in for elaborate confections that consider the heading of salads in America. As a general rule, fantasy salad in France goes no farther than occasionally slicing a few tomatoes into the lettuce, or perhaps adding a little crumbled bacon, especially with dandelion greens. For escarole, three parts of oil to two of vinegar is more common. Lamb's lettuce takes almost no salt. For romaine (Paris lettuce) and water cress, you reduce the proportion of oil.

SOME housewives replace the vinegar in their salad seasoning by lemon juice, which in my opinion makes it too thin. But you might make it rich if in addition to replacing vinegar by lemon juice you replace the oil by heavy cream, converting your dish into salade à la crème. In this case the proportion becomes five parts of cream to one of lemon juice.

You might need to do some experimentation on this—the French crème fraîche is not quite equivalent of either our light or heavy cream. To me, it seems to fall between the two, closer to heavy cream than to light, but has apparently undergone some processing which gives it a smoother texture than our cream.

Difference in ingredients might possibly account partly for the ulty of reproducing French salad seasoning in the United States. The importance of this point was brought home to me a couple of years ago when I was engaged in preparing for American use a cookbook of French recipes. The fiendish task of turning metric system measurements into American cooking measures was bad enough, but it soon developed that ingredients that I assumed were equivalent on both sides of the Atlantic were actually quite different. The translated recipes were tested in the United States before acceptance for publication, sometimes with disconcerting results.

Sole Dugléré, for instance, turned out so disastrously that the stars rechristened it "Sole de l'uey." Experimentation showed that the trouble was not in the fact that the European sole does not exist in the United States, but in a difference between French and American flours, which are not made from the same kind of wheat. A complete revision of proportions is necessary to arrive at approximately the same effect.

So for those who have had difficulty with salad seasonings of the French type, let's look first at the ingredients.

WE CAN neglect, I think, the salt and pepper, though I did know before the war a gourmet soussy about his seasoning that he put three varieties of salt, as well as two of pepper, on his table. And of course anyone who uses a French pepper mill to grind the whole peppercorns as they are needed is familiar with the difference this makes. (To really heighten a pepper effect, apply it mignonette—with the whole peppercorns split into small pieces, rather than pushed into powder.)

As for the oil, I don't think there is any substitute for pure olive oil. In France, peanut oil, brought in from North Africa, is coming more and more common, because of the great difference in price; but to me peanut oil seems better to have no taste at all, or only a banal one.

Olive oil, incidentally, has other qualities besides the gastronomic. It is true that it contains almost hundred percent fats, and no vitamins or mineral salts, but it makes up for this by a tendency to reduce cholesterol. Raw—which of course is the way you get it in salads—it is also recommendable for those whose livers are sensitive. From the point of view of dietary balance, its perfect use is in salads, since they are rich in exactly the substances olive oil lacks—vitamins and mineral salts—but are extremely low in nutritive or caloric values, which the oil takes care of.

Olive oil is more complicated than you might think. There are many grades, and I cannot guarantee that labeling practices in the United States are consistent with those in France.

In France, the best oil is what is marketed as virgin (vierge)—oil produced from the first cold pressing of the fruit. The second pressing, using more powerful presses and the encouragement of warm water, produces second-quality oil, often mixed with some of the first pressing before sale, which, if its acidity is no greater than 1.5 percent, may be marketed under the confusing name of huiles vierges fines—fine virgin oils. This might seem to imply higher quality than the simple term vierge, but it doesn't. In olive oil, virginity is an absolute quality, unimproved by refinement.

For vinegar, I always use wine vinegar, but cider vinegar should be an acceptable substitute. I don't suppose that anyone in the United States these days makes his own vinegar, except perhaps in remote rural districts. But in case there may still be a few rare practitioners of this art, it may not be amiss to insert here a warning against the way this seems to have been done most often in the past. When wine is allowed to sour until the "vinegar flowers" form on its surface, beneath which the alcohol is being transformed into acetic acid, all the vinegar thus formed should be used up, and a new bottle started next time. Most at-home vinegar makers, however, keep the bottle full, continually replacing the vinegar as they use it by fresh wine. This causes the building up in the bottle of the spongy mass known as the "vinegar mother," which is repugnant in appearance—and in fact.

FOR the vinegar mother is not, as many housewives think, the catalyst that promotes the production of more and better vinegar. It produces bacteria that are not exclusively the desired mycoderma aceti. From it proceed also the mucilaginous acetic bacteria that, instead of turning the alcohol into acetic acid, burn away the acetic acid. Not only does this destroy the delicacy of the taste of good vinegar, but it may in the end produce a liquid which is definitely toxic.

Even at its best, vinegar too freely used irritates the stomach, increasing gastric acidity. Hence if anyone in your family is subject to dyspepsia or related disorders, you had better, after all, substitute lemon juice for vinegar. Undiluted lemon juice can be hard on the stomach too; but diluted in salad dressing it loses its potency. And it adds to your salad a concentrated dose of vitamin C.

THIS covers all the ingredients of the seasoning, which is our main concern for the moment; but perhaps something should be said about the salad greens themselves, of which the most common is lettuce. It should be chosen young and freshly picked, and after you have bought it, do not keep it too long before eating it. If you must keep it for a little while, wrap it in a damp dishcloth after having washed and then dried it. But in any case, try not to keep it longer than 24 hours.

When you wash your lettuce, it is well to do it successively in several changes of water, or under running water. What you should not do is leave it in a basin to soak. You will thus lose most of the vitamin C, which is soluble in water.

Finally, remember that the greener leaves are richer in vitamins and mineral salts than the white leaves.

The chances are that if your French seasoning is not working out well, the fault is not in the ingredients, which are simple and easy to obtain anywhere. When I was living on my farm outside a small Vermont village, I achieved excellent results, as noted above, with the materials obtainable at the general store—not exactly stocked with exotic products. (It did carry genuine olive oil.) Perhaps the trouble should be sought in some circumstance extraneous to the making of the salad seasoning proper.

Does your seasoning seem watery? This could be for the very simple reason that there is water in it. After the lettuce has been washed, how do you dry it? The approved method in France is to put it into a spherical basket of open-meshed wire and swing it vigorously to get rid of the water, some of which may spray the kitchen a bit while the rest evaporates. Thus you work in a little physical culture with your salad-making. The lettuce is then pressed firmly between soft cloths, which blot up what moisture is left. Only after it has been completely dried is it ready to be dampened again this time with the seasoning. (Warning: don't use a hair dryer to get rid of the moisture. I have known this to be tried, and unfortunately it also gets rid of the crispness of the lettuce.)

How do you apply your seasoning? In American restaurants, I have often been served what was referred to as salad—usually bits of greens finely chopped in a fairly successful effort to make them resemble hay—over which the dressing had been poured. This may be an error due to a linguistic habit. When you talk of "salad dressing," you imply a separate entity, which can be concocted by itself and then applied from without. But when you speak of "seasoning," as the French do, you mean an ingredient which is an integral part of the dish, worked into it at the same time that the main dish is made, not conceivable apart from it.

The French cook preparing salad takes a bowl large enough to admit maneuvering and begins by mixing the seasoning in the bottom of the bowl. The lettuce is then placed on top of the seasoning. With the salad spoon and fork, the lettuce is now turned over and over in the bowl until each leaf has been impregnated with the seasoning. This "tossing" of the salad is referred to in French as "tiring" it (fatiguer). It may tire the manipulator, but not the salad, which emerges crisp and crunchy from this treatment. But don't expect to serve any leftovers at the next meal, for by then the seasoning which has coated the leaves will have wilted them into a soggy mass. For this reason, the salad should be made freshly just before the meal—except for the more resistant curly varieties, like escarole or chicory (French style), which may be prepared in advance.

AT THIS point, let me interject a habit of my own family—and of many French families—which is possible only if you serve the salad when the French do—after the main course—instead of at the beginning, as is so often done in the United States. We do not have our plates changed after a roast that leaves gravy on them, or some dish which has bestowed on them the remains of a meat sauce—say, the remainder of a just-consumed oeuf bourguignon. We put the salad in the meat plate, adding the remaining gravy or sauce to its normal seasoning (you don't stir it in; just put it on the plate) and find that it greatly enriches the effect.

Another detail apart from the mixing of the seasoning itself: What do you use for a salad bowl? The first requirement, as indicated above, is size. It needs to be large enough so that you can work lettuce and seasoning thoroughly together. It may be porcelain, of course, but the best bowls are of wood. And among the different kinds of wood, the best is olive wood. It is, after all, only normal that the wood of the olive should have a natural affinity for its fruit.

When you use a wooden bowl unpolished, on the interior, at least, never wash it. Rub it clean with a cloth after each usage. As time goes on, the pores of the wood become even more deeply impregnated with the oil, and each successive salad is that much tastier. Obviously, you should try always to use olive oil, in order not to mix inferior blends into your built-in seasoning.

This brings up the question of whether or not to use garlic. If you employ it often in salads, using the same bowl for all, after a while you will have no choice. On a day when you don't want a garlic, there will still be a faint aroma of it. It will come from the bowl. The remedy, of course, is simple: one bowl for garlic-flavored salads, one for nongarlic salads.

I prefer personally to take my salads made from the less sophisticated greens, such as lettuce, without garlic. But there are some types of salad that seem to call for it, such as the curly variety known in French as chicory (chicorée) but here more often as endive.

When you use garlic, do so with discretion. You don't put a garlic clove directly into the bowl. There are two approved methods. One is to rub the sides of the bowl lightly with garlic (raw, of course). The other is to put a crouton in the bottom of the bowl. This means a slice of round French bread, impregnated with olive oil and rubbed with garlic. Its contact with the salad during the tossing process is sufficient to perfume it delicately.

The minute amount of garlic added to the salad by these methods is not sufficient to produce any unpleasant effects for those allergic to garlic, a plant that combines curiously good and bad reactions on the human system. The instinct of Mediterranean parents who for years have been accustomed to give their children bread and garlic for breakfast has only recently been confirmed by scientists who have discovered that garlic possesses antibiotic qualities. The ancient Romans fed garlic to fighting cocks before a match to increase their force, and the Arabs use it as an antidote to certain toxic substances. It is an intestinal disinfectant; it is considered helpful to sufferers from arthritis, gout, and rheumatism; it facilitates circulation of the blood and reduces hypertension. But it is not easy to digest, and when taken raw may be an irritant for the kidneys.

If, after weighing these pros and cons, you elect to use garlic in your salad, here are a few tips for you: If you grow it in your own kitchen

(as I used to do on my farm before it ran wild into the pasture, inducing the cows to give garlic-flavored milk), don't use it straight from the ground. At this stage it has no taste. It must be allowed to age in a dry, well-aired place. The transparent onion-skin covering protects the garlic from moisture. Don't remove it or split the whole piece of garlic into its constituent cloves until you are ready to use it; and then break off one at a time only as many pieces as you need immediately. Even more important, don't use garlic that is too old. You can tell when it has passed its prime by its yellow color when you have peeled it (it should be white), by brown spots on its surface, and by a little shoot of green in the center, where the garlic has begun to germinate. When garlic reaches this stage, its odor becomes unpleasantly strong, it is harder than ever to digest, and it can become more or less toxic.

Aside from garlic, a heightener of salad flavor can be found in herbs—finely chopped parsley, chervil, tarragon or chives, sprinkled rather sparingly over the lettuce leaves. Try to use fresh herbs. After all, the outstanding characteristic of a salad is freshness. Any herbs used should be fresh too.

WHAT THE NEW SNOW BLOWERS CAN DO FOR YOU

Powerful 4-hp blower cuts a swath 23½" wide. Its rotor turns 1000 RPM, making short work of any snow bank. About $245.

Cutting a 16" swath, this hand-propelled blower moves as fast as you can push it. It is a 2½-hp, fan type, sells for approximately $130.

The cleat wheels dig in, give extra traction in rough going. Adjustable for plowing cinder driveways as well as paving. $180.

a permanently fixed spout and this is a decided inconvenience. Better are spouts that can be shifted to either side; most versatile are spouts that rotate. Some swivel 180°, others 270°. But though this feature is very handy, operating a swivel spout may require considerably more effort than using a spout that simply shifts from side to side, which is where you want to throw most of the time. Be sure to check the ease of operation.

Most blowers gather snow by a sort of corkscrew mechanism called an auger. This rotating auger helps pull itself into the snow, adding to the ease with which it propels itself. Other blowers have a whirling disk. These may do a somewhat better job of breaking up snow and throwing it, but they lose a little on the traction side.

Some blowers have multiple use. By means of attachments, they'll also mow grass, till the garden, or do other chores. As a general rule, machines with multiple use are a compromise. Often they won't do any one job as well as a machine designed for that one job.

Exceptions are walking or riding tractors. Attachments for tractors are usually individual machines and aren't cramped by multipurpose demands. One snow-blower attachment for a tractor has its own gathering and throwing engine and is dependent on the tractor only for its mobility.

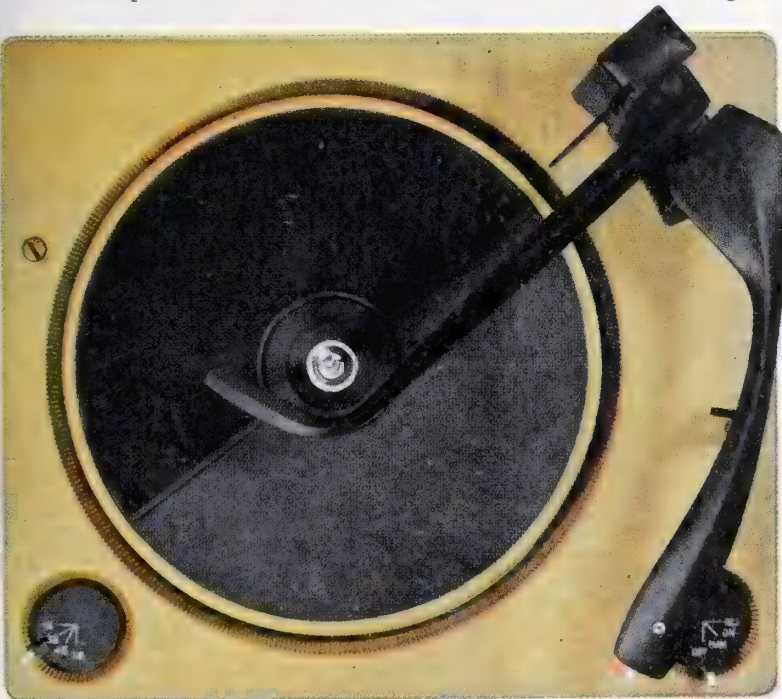

Snow blowers take up considerable storage space, and they are difficult to handle and get into tight corners when their engine is not running. A fair-sized blower will require 15 sq. ft. (three feet by five feet). As with a power lawn mower, in the off season gasoline must be drained completely from the machine, its spark plug removed, and a small amount of oil poured into its cylinder to prevent rust. Otherwise its maintenance and life expectancy are essentially like that of a power mower.

birthday party: Don't! This, of course, is a deplorable attitude.

Miss Emma Lowe, a famous child psychologist (or was she a dental technician?) who talked at our nursery-school parents' meeting, told us that you can do terrible harm to a child's personality by not giving him birthday parties or Christmas presents.

Naturally, I don't want my children to grow up emotionally unstabilized. Therefore, when a child of mine asks to have a birthday party, I surely do not refuse. I merely appeal to his sense of family loyalty: "Wouldn't it be fun to have a family birthday supper here at home, all together, just the seven of us?"

WHEN that doesn't work, I appeal to his sympathy: "I just don't think Mommy could take another birthday party this month. You know how hard Mommy works washing your clothes, ironing your clothes, fixing your clothes, making good things for you to eat, keeping the house nice and clean for you, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera."

Then I appeal to his sense of fair play: "You've had a birthday party every year for seven years now. Don't you think it's about time you gave some poor, unfortunate little child a chance to have a party instead of you?" Finally, if necessary, I reluctantly appeal to his sense of greed: "I'll give you ten dollars if you'll skip your party this year."

If, after all this, my child still insists he wants a birthday party, I wouldn't think of saying no.

We then proceed to the planning and invitation stage.

Some mothers are really ingenious when it comes to making birthday party invitations, but I'm the unskilled type of mother. I can't whip up clever things. We just go to the dime store and pick out some original invitations (turned out by the thousands).

We do make a big production out of planning the guest list and writing the invitations. One warning, though: Once you've dropped the party invitations into the corner mailbox, you have passed what is referred to as the "point of no return."

There may be some disagreement on the number of guests to be invited. Years ago, I read that a good rule to follow is: Have the same number of guests as your child's age. I told that to my friend Lorraine. Her reply was, "Yeah, I'll go along with that till the age of two. Can't we just freeze the number there?" Do the best you can.

Besides keeping the number of guests to a minimum, here are certain other rules you should bear in mind when planning the details:

Make the party as short as possible. Have you noticed that birthday parties are getting shorter? Also, that boys' birthday parties are shorter than girls'?

Keep things simple. This is especially true if you are going to feed the children. You might as well—they're as harmless at a table as anywhere. Up to age nine or ten for girls and even higher for boys, hot dogs and potato chips are your best bet. (You know, of course, that you must personally put the mustard and ketchup on each hot dog as ordered.)

Don't try to be the Elsa Maxwell of the grade-school set. I once tried—for my older daughter's seventh birthday. No hot dogs and potato chips this time, said I. Not fancy enough. So I made up trays of assorted sandwiches: tuna and celery salad, mild cheddar cheese, cream cheese and nuts, and just a few peanut-butter-and-jelly. Turned out all the girls wanted peanut-butter-and-jelly sandwiches, and lots of them. All but one of the girls, that is: "I eat only sliced turkey sandwiches," she informed me, with a look of disdainful superiority.

There I was, frantically making more peanut-butter-and-jelly sandwiches on bread still icy from the freezer, while that beautiful assortment just demoisturized.

YOU'VE discovered paper plates and napkins and cups and plastic tablecloths, I'm sure. You know that a big bunch of blown-up balloons transforms any room, clean or otherwise, into a birthday paradise. And you know that any birthday cake will do if it has lots of frosting and big 'fat candles, just so a lusty birthday song goes with it!

Spend the least possible time in your home. The most effective way of observing this rule is not to have the party in your home at all. Taxpayers have every right to use their city's recreational facilities. The parks, the zoo, the picnic groves, the local "fun house" or amusement park, all make wonderful sites for a birthday celebration. And they contribute to the continued employment of the city's maintenance engineers. You should, of course, pick a time when these facilities are relatively deserted. But even if that's not the case when you arrive, they may be vacant soon.

Don't feel that warm, sunny weather is necessary for these outdoor activities. Children are remarkably sturdy and adaptable. I have never yet taken a group for a birthday picnic when it was actually raining, but Ronnie Lawrence's mother did. She wasn't too popular with some of the more health-conscious mothers, but I happen to know that the Lawrences had just installed beige wall-to-wall carpeting in their living, dining, and hall areas, so I didn't take sides.

EVEN if you have part or all of the party in your home, here's a tip you may not have thought of to cut down the time spent there:

Offer to pick up and deliver all the birthday party guests. This has several points in its favor. First of all, it puts you in a very good light. Most parents appreciate having their child chauffeured to and from their home. They mark you down as especially considerate and charitable.

What they don't realize is that you pick up the first guest at the time the party is scheduled to begin (so he'll be ready), and you return the last guest at the time the party is scheduled to end (so his parents won't worry about him). If you drive slowly, this chauffeuring period can cut off a sizable amount of time at each end of the party.

If you are a veteran party-giver, you will recognize another advantage to this little maneuver. It outfoxes the mother who never comes to pick up her child from a birthday party until one or two hours after the scheduled time of departure.

Stay with the group at all times. This rule is adapted from a scout handbook on safety while swimming, hiking, and mountain climbing. It is also very important in party-giving, even (or, I might say, especially) if the party is in your home. Powder your nose before the party begins. Be right in the same room when all games are played. Be right on hand when the presents are opened. If you have to go to the kitchen to prepare refreshments or lunch, take the group to the kitchen with you. This is most essential if your birthday party is for boys. You would be absolutely amazed at what can happen in and to a living room in sixty seconds.

Keep smiling. Keep your voice pleasant, too. Even if you have to reprimand someone, do it sweetly. You don't want the word to get around that you're a "hatchet-face," do you? I realized this only after I had gotten the following post-party reports from my children on various occasions:

"Judy's mommy took some little white pills. She said our screaming gave her a headache."

"Gee, Mom, is Mrs. Brown ever nervous! All I did was bump against a little statue in her living room, and she jumped about a foot!"

I repeat: Keep smiling. If things get too rough, mutter to yourself three times (still smiling!): "This too shall pass. This too shall pass. This too shall pass!"

This brings us to the end of the party.

Send the children home happy. If you have followed my suggestions, your child's party has been a tremendous success: exclusive, intriguingly brief, deceptively simple, healthfully outdoorish, commendably supervised, and pleasantly directed. Now for the finale.

You want the guests to leave with the conviction that they've had a wonderful time. You want them to greet their parents with smiling faces and a "Man, was it ever neat!" response to the standard "How was the birthday party?" question.

How do you insure this? Simple! The last thing you do before each guest leaves your home or gets out of your car is to give him—in the following order: a big smile, a package of bubble gum, two large balloons, three candy bars, and an inexpensive present picked out for him by your own birthday child. The smile on each face as you wave good-by will be positive proof that you can plan on Many Happy Returns!

The wonderful world of

Johann Strauss

When the conversation turns to Bach, Bartók, and Beiderbecke, you needn't feel apologetic if your own musical preference is for Strauss waltzes.

It places you in the best of company, for the Waltz King has been revered by musical giants of every age

By RICHARD FREED

• Nearly a hundred years ago, Vienna was divided into two bitterly hostile camps. In the capital of the world of music, nothing so trivial as politics or economics was involved. The supporters of Brahms and those of Wagner were heatedly denouncing each other's idol, with writers, statesmen, critics and musicians eagerly joining one faction or the other. But the music capital was also the birthplace of the waltz, and both Wagner and Brahms shared an enthusiasm for another composer, a man who was a friend to both and was idolized by all Vienna—and, indeed, by all the world.

"His is the most musical head in Europe," said Wagner of Johann Strauss, the Waltz King. Wagner's enthusiasm was such that on one occasion, during a performance of the waltz Wine, Woman and Song, he dashed to the bandstand, seized the baton from the astonished conductor and led the orchestra in the remainder of the piece himself.

"Unfortunately not by me," wrote Johannes Brahms beneath the first few bars of the Blue Danube Waltz, which he had inscribed on a lady's fan. Brahms loved to play his own transcriptions of Strauss waltzes on the piano, and he was often in the theater when a new Strauss operetta was in rehearsal. He even added a touch of his own to the overture of one of the operettas, Waldmeister.

Brahms and Wagner were among the first, but by no means the only "serious" composers to pay homage to Johann Strauss, who has always enjoyed the respect and admiration of his fellow musicians. Richard Strauss bore no family relationship to the Waltz King, but the delicious waltz music of Der Rosenkavalier is certainly descended directly from Wiener Blut. Ravel's brilliant La Valse was conceived in part as a tribute to "Strauss—not Richard, but the older one, Johann." Keyboard wizards from Liszt to Dohnányi have made elaborate "paraphrases" of Johann's waltzes, galops, polkas, and marches, and at least two ballets—Graduation Ball and Le Beau Danube—have been arranged from his music.

Ever since Strauss himself led his own famous orchestra, the great singers and conductors of every generation have turned to his music with the same affection lavished on the other great Viennese musical masters.

New Year's Eve performances of Die Fledermaus are as strong a tradition in many cities as a Christmas presentation of Handel's Messiah. Significantly, one of the records released to mark George Szell's fiftieth year as a conductor is an all-Strauss program, and Fritz Reiner's final year as music director of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra saw the release of a record of Strauss waltzes unsurpassed in terms of sheer musical beauty by any of that great conductor's other recordings. Arthur Fiedler of the Boston Pops, who played in the great Strauss orchestra itself as a youth (under Johann III, son of the Waltz King's youngest brother, Eduard), has carried on the tradition with notable success, and Josef Krips and Willi Boskovsky are active today as inheritors of the true Viennese Strauss tradition from such illustrious conductors of the cent past as the late Bruno Walz, Clemens Krauss, and Erich Kleiber. The Eduard Strauss who actually continues the family tradition in Vienna is the son of Johann III.

IN HIS own time, Johann Strauss was as responsive to other composers as they were to him. Just as Mozart was "paraphrasing" his influences, Strauss was composing waltzes based on Verdi arias, English and American ballads, and other sources (one humorous example quotes no fewer than five English tunes, plus the American st Before the Battle, Mother). His greatest significance, perhaps, was his response to Wagner.

His friendship with Brahms did not keep Strauss from being a pioneer Wagner enthusiast. While many of his contemporaries were pressing shock at the "daring" harmonic innovations Wagner introduced in Tristan und Isolde, Strauss was quick to recognize their sensuous beauty and make use of them in the heady orchestral coloring of his own music. When the conservative Vienna Opera rejected Tristan, it was Johann Strauss who conducted the premiere of the now famous "Prelude and Liebestod" with his own orchestra.

The Waltz King's stature in the realm of "serious" music may come as a surprise to you if you have thought of Strauss waltzes as pretty dance tunes and nothing more. In any case, it may be that you have never heard them performed as Strauss and his brothers wrote them: elaborate "symphonic poems" of three-quarter time. Inevitably, and ironically, the music's very popularity has resulted in myriad uncanceled "arrangements" which have the tunes recognizable but never even hint at the true dimensions of Strauss's genius.

To take the most familiar example: Everyone knows the Blue Danube Waltz. Its four-note theme is probably the best-known melody in all music, recognized at once the world over by people whose musical preferences may range from Bach to Bartók to Dizzy Gillespie to Lawrence Welk. It has been performed and recorded in almost every imaginable arrangement, from the composer's original setting for male chorus and orchestra to later-day showpieces for marimba solo or an "orchestra" of sixteen pianos. How, really, is it supposed to be played?

The "Blue Danube," or, to give it its full title, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube," is a typical Strauss waltz, made up of an introduction, a chain of as many as five waltzes, and a postlude that is generally a nostalgic reprise of the main waltz melody before the final flourish. It is these poetic introductions and postludes that give Strauss's waltz-poems their unique balance, contributing to a pattern of truly symphonic proportions. Strauss is at his most imaginative in those sections, and it is even said that he sometimes composed only the introductions and postludes, leaving the chain of waltzes in between to be filled in by one of his brothers or an assistant.

(The last remark is not meant to imply that the Waltz King's younger brothers themselves were mere assistants. Josef and Eduard were persuaded by their famous brother to turn to composing after they had become, respectively, an architect and a diplomat. Eduard composed fewer than a hundred pieces, but Josef turned out nearly three hundred, compared with Johann's almost five hundred. Josef's waltzes are invariably poetic in content and imaginative in title; many musicians, including his elder brother himself, have considered Josef the greater composer.)

Until long-playing records were introduced some fifteen years ago, recordings of the great waltzes with their introductions and postludes intact were rare indeed, since cuts were made frequently in order to fit the music onto a single 78-rpm record side, or at least to keep it from spreading over two discs. Thus one of the most beloved of all composers was also one of the most maltreated. There was, for example, not a single recording available in this country of the complete version of Tales from the Vienna Woods, which includes an extraordinary pastoral introduction and coda featuring a zither solo. The magnificent Wine, Woman and Song, perhaps the most "symphonic" of all the waltzes, was almost always presented with its amazingly developed introduction (almost half the composition!) lopped off, even in "live" performances. Even in the Emperor Waltz, the exquisite little dialogue for solo cello and horn which separates the end of the waltz proper from the final blaze of trumpets and drums was often excised, though it takes but a minute and adds so much pleasure.

Today's enthusiasm for "authenticity," which came about largely as a result of the heightening of general musical awareness ushered in with the long-playing record, means that the omission of the zither in a recording of Tales from the Vienna Woods is about as rare as the omission of the harpsichord in Bach's Brandenburg Concertos. Happily, most recordings of the great waltzes of the Waltz King, his brothers and their father (Johann I) are not only "complete" but "idiomatic," the majority made by the incomparable Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra or by other groups led by conductors of Viennese background.

Some people may find one record of Strauss waltzes sufficient for their collections, but this music is so infectious that you probably won't be able to stop at one. If you want more, you may run the risk of duplicating some of the titles unless you pay careful attention to the contents of the respective records.

One way to avoid this is to stick to the same series of recordings, such as the one by Willi Boskovsky and the Vienna Philharmonic on London Records. Boskovsky, one of the Philharmonic's concertmasters (two or more men alternate in that post), leads with his fiddle, in the manner of Johann Strauss himself. He conducted Viennese programs last summer at the Hollywood Bowl and New York's Lewisohn Stadium. Boskovsky's series now runs to five records, on which the familiar waltzes are spaced out with some of the less familiar, as well as an abundance of polkas, marches, gallops, quadrilles, etc.

Of course, you may wish to sample the art of some of the other great Strauss conductors. The few recordings remaining by the late Clemens Krauss (also with the Vienna Philharmonic, on Richmond Records) show that there were both rhyme and reason in the association of his name with that of the Waltz King. Krauss was to Johann Strauss what Beecham was to Delius, Bruno Walter to Mahler. The blend of seductiveness and Gemutlichkeit he achieved is still something to marvel at. In addition to three records of dances, Krauss is represented in the record catalog by complete recordings of both Die Fledermaus and The Gypsy Baron.

Herbert von Karajan is usually categorized as a "brilliant" conductor rather than a "mellow" one, but he is surprisingly ingratiating in his single RCA Victor record, featuring a ravishing account of

Tales from the Vienna Woods and Josef's marvelous Delirien Waltzer, as well as the overtures to the two popular operettas. It is a fine companion for the gorgeous collection on another RCA Victor disc by Fritz Reiner and the Chicago Symphony. The sheen of the strings in Reiner's Wiener Blut is cause for new amazement with each hearing; this is one of the great orchestral records—in or out of the Strauss discography.

Bruno Walter's Columbia Record has a charm all its own, of course, and it offers a very substantial program, made up of the four greatest waltzes and the two famous overtures. Other fine entries featuring the Vienna Philharmonic are those conducted by Josef Krips and Rudolf Kempe. (Is there something magical about the initiation "K"? Krauss, Kempe, Krips, Karajan, Kleiber—all distinguished practitioners of the Viennese tradition.) With complete versions of the great Wine, Woman and Song rather hard to come by, the one on Westminster by Armando Aliberti may be recommended, together with the non-Strauss components of his program, especially the enchanting performance of Lehar's Gold and Silver. Arthur Fiedler's collection offers waltzes by all three of the Strauss brothers.

The short list of records which follows is designed to help you select the most attractive recordings of the great waltzes, and also help avoid duplications if you wish to have more than one record of them. All the performances listed here are scrupulously complete, and authentic as to instrumentation. Numbers of stereo records are shown in italics.

EMBOSSING

The drawing of the embossing lines should be done very casually, free-hand and relaxed. Use a blunt pencil, pressing hard against a magazine, thick pile of newspaper, or scratch pad. The harder you press, the richer the effect achieved. Don't worry if your lines waver and are not parallel. It is essential to the handcrafted look. The pencil does not leave a mark—only an impression.

If you don't believe this, try embossing with a four-tined fork or a many-tined cake-breaker. You get absolutely parallel lines, but absolutely no character or interest. So draw lines one by one, even if they're wobbly and wandery.

The more heavily you cover the surface of the base metal with lines, the handsomer it gets.

Don't use good scissors to cut out forms. Base metal is actually metal. A small Exacto mat knife is good for cutting openwork such as the wings of the birds.

Duco cement will stick together two sheets of the metal, but it tends to smear the colored types. So use dots of cement, then use paper clips to secure sheets till cement dries. Staples were used to hold the centers of birds and stars together.

After you've made a few, following our forms and shapes, you'll have mastered the technique. Then try out more shapes on your own. You'll be amazed at the results.

Jewel pendants are two layers of base metal pasted together—gold on top, colored layer underneath. Emboss gold sheet—but not bottom sheet. After embossing, cut out pendants. Open "jewel" holes with small scissors with small cuts radiating from a center hole. Back these with colored metal (not embossed), using thin line—or dots—of Duco cement around outer edge. (Cement smears color, so be careful.) Clip pieces together with paper clips until dry. Flip up jewel openings with scissors' points. For joining several pendants, pierce holes with heavy darning needle for the thin wire that joins units. Full-scale drawings for tracing are included in kit.

DRAWINGS BY GRAMBS MILLER

Leaves are single pieces of gold base metal, embossed on back side only (to let leaf curl). Make slits in leaves (with mat knife or razor blade) slightly wider than tabs. Put tabs through slits and bend over to hold. Leaves should hang in random cascades, so place slits differently on leaves. More leaves will make composition more effective.

PHOTOGRAPH BY HORST

The three-dimensional stars are so light in weight that they can be hung with nearly invisible thread. They are made with four or five layers of base metal, in mixed colors, and stapled at the center. Embossing of star points is done alternately from opposite sides, to keep points from curling. After layers are stapled, spread apart with fingers to make completely three-dimensional.

Both stars and birds use gold for the two outside pieces, with colors sandwiched between. Place pattern contained in kit on top of base metal and trace with blunt pencil. Work on folded newspaper or magazine, but don't press hard enough to break through metal. Cut out star shapes and slit from points to near center. Emboss every other section on one side of metal. Turn over and emboss on the alternate sections. Assemble the layers on top of each other and staple together. Star points should not be lined up. Then pull out points so the whole becomes a sphere.

A flock of birds skimming over candle flames is an engaging way to mount this form. Since base metal is fireproof (also weatherproof), this produces no risk. The heat from the flames makes the birds move gently. They are so lightweight they can be hung with a thread and can be mounted to the ceiling with a tiny piece of Scotch tape. The longer the thread, the more any movement would be noticeable.

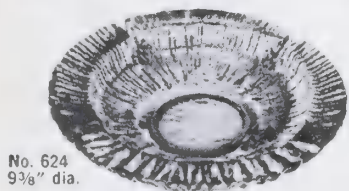

DRAWINGS BY GRAMBS MILLER

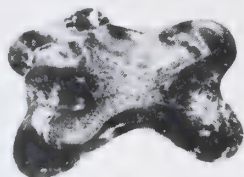

Birds need two shapes. Place two pieces of gold metal back to back (gold on outside). Trace pattern on top, cut an emboss. Slit V's in the body with mat knife or razor blade to be flipped up to show underneath. Trace and cut out several wing shapes of colored metal, placing them back to back. Rub blunt pencil down centers of wing and tail feathers, alternating on top. Then reverse and repeat on back, making feather curl in different directions. Assemble colored wing pieces slightly unevenly and staple together (two colors face outward). Put gold birds on either side. Staple at head and base of tail. Pull out feather curl of wings and tail to complete.

even the same incomplete fermentation that is so common in Italy, but the widely distributed Zinfandels are dry and soft.

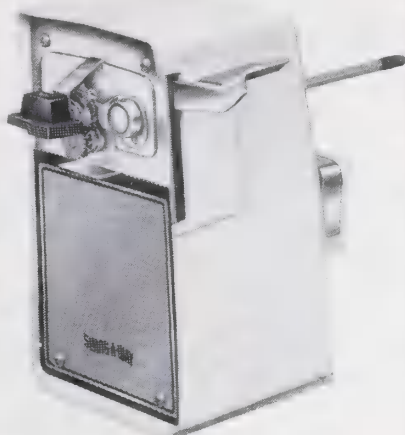

But does Zinfandel age? some may ask. Many Zinfandels, like Beaujolais, are ready to drink one or two years; in fact, they are usually fruitier if consumed young. But there is the occasional Zinfandel that surprises the experts and continues to improve.

Many remember a fine 1936 Napa Valley Zinfandel that not only lasted until after World War II but seemed to reach its peak only after about 20 years. Certainly, however, most Zinfandels reach their best quality within one or four years after bottling. About 5,000 named varieties of grapes of the European type are cultivated in the world today. All apparently are descendants of the primitive type of vine that probably originated thousands of years ago in southern Russia or northern Iraq or Iran. The botanists classify them as Vitis vinifera. They are entirely different from the native American grapes of the record type grown in the East.

The color of their fruit varies from palest yellow to darkest purple. Some are seedless, others not. Many have very small berries, while others are large-berried. The berries may be round, oval, or even heart-shaped. The clusters upon which the berries are borne may be small, medium, or large. The juice of the berries varies markedly in composition, depending on the variety and the climatic conditions under which the grape is grown. The color of some varieties is low in acid, and the flesh is solid and crisp in texture. These make our eating grapes, especially when grown in a relatively warm climate. The juice of other varieties is very watery, the flesh is soft, and often they have distinctive flavors. These are our premier wine grapes, particularly when grown in comparatively cool climatic areas.

Gradually, over the centuries, one of the thousands of different varieties have found a climate to which they are particularly adapted. When grown in this area, their grapes produce wines of distinctive flavor and special quality. As the Pinots find their best home in Burgundy, the Riesling is better along the Rhine than elsewhere, the Palomino grows best in Spain, and the less-well-known Zinfandel is uniquely cultivated in California.

Grille sections to use for that air of mystery

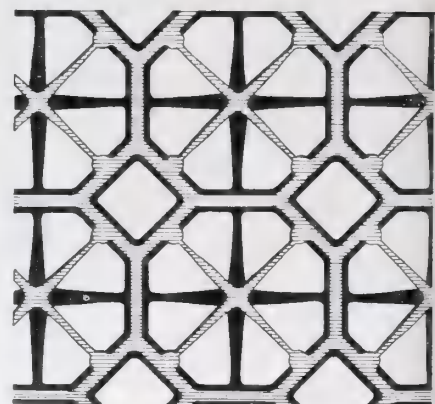

On pages 248-251 you saw some glamorous uses of grilles to reveal while still concealing. Starting below is a roundup of modular sections—metal, wood, concrete block, ceramic, plastic—that can make grille screening. Scale is 1/8" to 1"

Metal Grilles

Louis Sullivan, the great turn-of-the-century architect, created the original designs on which these four metal grilles have been based. The one at the right is based on his famous Golden Doorway in the Transportation Building at the 1895 World's Fair in Chicago. It has two superimposed grilles, each in a different texture to form a contrast.

Contrapuntal curved units in three different colors distinguish this grille inspired by Sullivan's historic Home Building Association Bank in Newark, Ohio. It could be used as a gay exterior screen wall.

This more geometric design is the result of study of Louis Sullivan's inventive ornament for the Getty Tomb in Chicago. Subtly curving lines enliven the cross-pieces of the two-layer, two-metal grille.

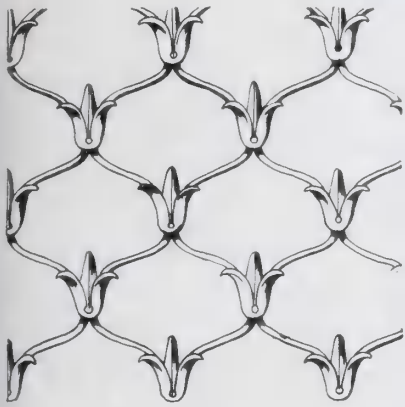

Three different textures, metal or color, interweave in this lacelike grille derived from the fabulous collection of Sullivan's drawings in the Burnham Library, Chicago Art Institute. All four Sullivan grilles are "Karvalum," sold through architects by Morris Kurtzon, Inc., 1420 S. Talman Ave., Chicago 8, Illinois.

Trellage is available in sixteen designs, cast either in malleable iron or lightweight aluminum. Iron panels have connector points, may be used as continuous, unbroken areas reinforced at every third panel. Available through architects or decorators. From Julius Blum & Co., Carlstadt, N.J.

Decor Panel grilles come in four different systems which can be combined. The one illustrated here, called Deca-Ring, is assembled out of  $4\frac{1}{2}$ " units. All four systems are fabricated of aluminum either anodized, in special finishes, or in baked enamel colors; are a bright note in a garden. Borden Metal Products Co., 890 Green Lane, Elizabeth, N.J.

Alcoa Alshade screen system provides a method of assembling panels made up of aluminum components coupled together and attached to framing units with self-tapping screws. Systems may be used continuously as well as in panels by using special angles attached to back of units. Alcoa International, Inc., 230 Park Avenue, New York 17.

The tenants of this apartment added a full ceiling installation of recessed lighting. This makes an ordinary dark hallway seem wider. A soft glow spills over into two bedrooms, two baths, and the living room. Pictures are placed in this gallerylike setting along the two long walls.

reminds the occupants that it is the same identical window used hundreds of times in the same building.

The solution used on this window wall is an excellent demonstration of how architectural interest was achieved by a minimum of construction. Even the window air conditioner and heating unit were minimized in the process, without impeding the flow of air. And usefulness was added at the same time that interest was created. Other rooms were similarly treated.

Dark spaces throughout the apartment were made brighter by the addition of recessed light and mirrors, each adding a special kind of architectural interest. Unbroken walls are used to good advantage for built-in storage units which add the unique qualities of custom installation to the apartment.

By ELSIE LOUISE SCULTHORP

■ When a plant is easy to grow, wonderfully useful in the garden, and a gem to cut for the house, it deserves our special attention. Such a plant is Galax aphylla, commonly known as wandflower or coltsfoot. In the garden, it is a beautiful ground cover and can be used wherever an accent of broad foliage is in order. It keeps marvelously after cutting, and you have doubtless seen it often in the florist's shop. But it's too seldom planted in the garden.

Galax is one of our very best evergreen natives, growing both in the mountains and along the East Coast, from Virginia to Georgia. It is, however, perfectly at home in temperate woods and in gardens everywhere.

The plant is completely hardy and not difficult to establish, if we will remember that its requirements are the same as those of rhododendrons and other acid-loving plants. Give it shade, plenty of leafmold and other humus, and some moisture. It is a perfect companion for low-growing azaleas and makes a handsome ground cover beneath a planting of rhododendrons. Once your plants are established, they will multiply and in a few years can be divided.

If you have a wild garden or a woodland trail, galax would make a handsome large-foliage edging or accent, and it is a splendid out-of-the-ordinary plant for a shady spot in a rock garden.

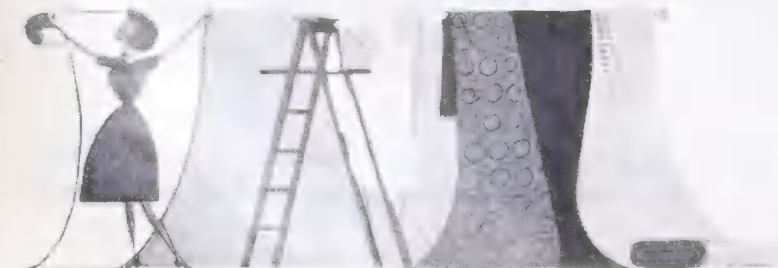

The basal leaves, as large as the palm of your hand, spring directly from the thick, matted, creeping rootstock in a small cluster or rosette, eight to ten inches high. The plant has no visible stem. The leaves are a rounded heart shape and vary in diameter from one to five inches, making the foliage adaptable to many decorative purposes. The leaves, when full grown, are bright, shining green, carried on long, strong, slender stems. In the autumn, when they are exposed to the sun and to frost, they turn a brilliant and beautiful reddish-bronze.

The spikelike racemes of tiny feathery white flowers are borne, in summer, above the leaves on wiry 18-inch stems. They make charming cut flowers. A group of galax in bloom would be wonderful to light up a dark and shady corner of the garden.

Both the leaves and the flowers are of real decorative value indoors as well as out. The leaves are particularly in demand in florists' shops, for formal arrangements and for holiday decoration. They also make charming doilies to go under dessert dishes or serving plates.

The foliage has the remarkable quality of keeping for long periods of time, and florists keep it in cold storage for use the year around. Formerly, ivy leaves were stored like this, but the galax foliage is easier to handle.

The following tribute to their

DRAWING BY JUE MARTIN

Graceful flowers of white appear on strong stems in summer. Both foliage and flowers keep well after cutting. Bricks in background are in scale with the plant to indicate size. Pressed leaf shows exact detail.

longevity is from Bailey's Encyclopaedia of Horticulture:

"A favorite arrangement of galax leaves is to place them loosely in a small vase, where they will retain their bright color and shape for weeks, even in a warm room."

The picking and shipping of galax leaves for decorative purposes, especially at Christmas, is a large industry in the South, particularly in the mountains of Virginia and North Carolina, where immense quantities of the green and brilliant reddish-bronze leaves are marketed. The size of the areas where the plant is native, and where it is gathered, is so large that there is apparently no danger of exterminating the plant by removing its leaves, which, strangely enough, does not seem to injure it.

Galax is the sole remaining member of a small family of plants (Diapensiaceae) far more extensive in past geologic times, but the family is now becoming extinct.

Once upon a time (and perhaps still) the leaves were used for bunching with violets, instead of the more fragile violet leaves. Not many nurseries sell the plant. I get mine from the Walter Marx Garden, Boring, Oregon.

Whether or not you decide to grow it in your garden, see if you can't get some from your florist, to see its charm for yourself.

Golden Oak

Golden Oak sprang from the same roots as Mission—the reaction against the ornateness of the preceding decades. But Golden Oak was a more generalized style with less dominating lines. It was factory-designed to meet popular taste. It is already very popular with artistically sophisticated people.

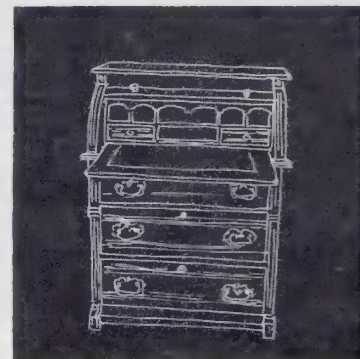

The pedestal table is at the heart of the Golden Oak craze. In New York City antique shops, they are selling for $45 and up. If you ask why they are popular, the answer is that they "go with modern." In the rough, $20.

The library table was much more widely used during the Victorian era, and Golden Oak pieces like this are quite common. Around $25 now, but this style is already well established, will continue to rise in popularity.

This chest of drawers was typical of the era. Solid oak, pressed-brass-sheet drawer pulls, grooves running across the fronts of the drawers. This is derivative of Eastlake. With oak top, $22; with marble top, $40.

Roll top of this desk is made of slats glued to canvas. Some lines are reminiscent of Eastlake, but pressed-brass drawer-pull shields and grooving across drawer front establish it as Golden Oak. Worth around $55.

Coming after the Eastlake era, Golden Oak developed in two directions. One tendency was toward simplification through functional design, as shown in this straight-back chair. It is made of oak, of course; around $6.

The other direction taken during the Golden Oak era was toward a general, undirected, and disorganized fanciness, typified by this chair with cane seat. Back has design pressed in by metal die, $4, but will rise a lot.

tuted, things that actually improve when they're "held" and don't lose their heat quickly. Apparently it is felt that such simple fare would be considered too cheap and homely by air travelers who are reputed to love steak above all other foods. But if we were an airline we'd at least give our kind of menu a trial. We've a theory that a good beef stew with a glass of red wine and fresh crusty bread can make most people feel more bon vivant than a coolish filet mignon smelling of its container.

It's minor, but we know exactly how exasperating it is to get those extra assessments sprung on you when you least expect them. The one that annoys us most is the airport tax, exacted by some countries just as you are leaving for good, loaded with duffle and general departure confusion. If you've made your travel arrangements through a travel agent, he should have given you fair warning, but it seems to us the airlines ought to alert you to this, in block letters, when they issue your ticket.

As to the service charge on European hotel and restaurant bills, we thought that by now everyone knew about that. It's a procedure we thoroughly applaud and only wish it were universally adopted so there would be an end, once and for all, to the tortures to tipping. Have you noticed how almost all authorities kind of weasel on the subject of how much to give to whom, never getting down to specific figures? It's as if they were afraid the help might hear that they'd been recommending too little and walk out on them. We've also noticed that many of our fellow countrymen resign themselves to a "go for broke" attitude the minute they get out of their own country. Nervously, they start tipping like mad, as if the service charges on the bills don't really mean what they say.

Our own naive method of coping with tipping is by trial and error. Offer what you think the traffic will bear, and the immediate reaction will let you know whether you're a success or a failure. If you start low, you may suffer a few snarls at the beginning, but eventually you learn how to gauge it.

To be perfectly fair about these cut and dried cliché itineraries that seasoned travelers tend to spurn, they've usually been originally planned by government travel organizations to take people into those parts of the country where

"Oh my! Look! Polished just a month ago, and I'm tarnished already!"

"Not me! I was polished six months ago with HAGERTY TARNISH PREVENTIVE and I still shine!"

Now you can display your silver every day, polish it only two or three times a year!

No longer must you bag it, sack it, rub it, scrub it, hide it, spray it! For the first time, you really prevent tarnish when you polish your silver. New Hagerty formula cleans, polishes and locks out tarnish for months in one easy step—just apply and rinse. Guaranteed safe. As gentle as a facial soap to hands and silver. Use it, and your next tarnished silver is months away.

sightseeing, transportation, and hotel facilities have been well developed. Who can blame a country for wanting to put what it considers its best foot forward—especially in entertaining American tourists who have had a long-time reputation for loving their creature comforts. They've also given the impression of being less than adventurous in seeking out the off-beat. It's an image we think the travel industry has held on to for too long, for as Americans travel more and more, they are becoming more inquisitive delvers into other people's cultures.

Our chief quarrel with most set itineraries is that they've been kept in status quo too long. Certainly all sorts of new territories have opened up to tourists in the past fifteen years, and new itineraries are constantly enriching the traveler's bill of fare. But we sometimes get the feeling that the travel officials haven't yet caught on to the fact that it's the life of the world that modern travelers have begun to look for, every bit as much as its historic monuments. We think the most imaginative approach to this great truth has been made by the Scandinavians with their "life-seeing" tours and the way they induce travelers out of the cities and into the countryside.

As for the depth of insight offered by the tours that give you a little bit of everything in three weeks, what could you expect? Les Barry, a man who makes his living traveling and writing about it, has given us a couple of clinchers. In an Amsterdam travel office recently, he witnessed two gentle lady members of such a group requesting a city map of Copenhagen. When the clerk replied he had only maps of Amsterdam, the ladies had to confess in bewilderment that they misread their itinerary, skipping their day in Amsterdam, and thought they were in Denmark. Here's another: As a couple climbed on a departing tour bus outside a Swiss hotel, the lady was heard to ask her husband, "Where are we going today, honey—France?" "No, dear," said her husband, "we were in France yesterday. Today we go to Italy."

We can't deny that escorted tours can fill a need, especially for first-time travelers and for the timid. They can give lone travelers companionship and a sense of being watched over. (The sense of being watched over, we are told by people who have conducted such tours, can sometimes lull tourists into such irresponsibility that they act as if they weren't able to make a decision of their own!)

Travel agents are not usually averse to sending their clients off on package tours for a couple of good reasons. The agent gets a commission for selling such tours, which are arranged by travel wholesalers. And since the itinerary is already prepared, they save the agent's time and effort. You can hardly blame an agent for doing what comes easiest and most profitably when you realize the peculiar fact that he subsists primarily on commissions from carriers and hotels.

Travel agents are neither angels nor devils. The profession has no more and no less smart-aleck operators than any other business. But for the most part any criticism you hear of a travel agent stems from that commission system. Of course he's reluctant to send you to a pensione which won't pay the plush hotel's commission. Naturally he's not keen to hurry you into an off-beat area where they never heard of an agent, let alone a commission. The best agents are well traveled, as hep to the world as to their time tables and sailing schedules. They would prefer to custom-tailor independent itineraries to suit the tastes and purses of their clients. And for this we think they ought to be paid a fee for the time and professional know-how they put into the job. If this could be made standard procedure, we believe the general quality of travel arrangements would be immeasurably upgraded.

The rubberneck bus trip under the aegis of the wise-cracking guide can indeed be a thorn in the traveler's side, yet it does serve the function of at least acquainting you with the layout of a strange place. The trick is to concentrate more on looking than listening. These sightseeing junkets seem to us to suffer from the same time lag we mentioned before, underestimating the increasing urbanity and knowledge of modern travelers.

We have, sad to say, found that our own country's sight-seeing tours seem to be the worst offenders. One notable exception is the multilingual tour of New York City, master-minded by the Gray Line for overseas visitors. The recorded commentary, synchronized with the pace of the bus, comes over via earphones in French, German, Spanish, and Japanese, liberally and informatively, devoid of forced funnies. And there's no souvenir shop en route.

this spacesaving idea continues, the choice will widen. The extension cord on the coffee-table units presents a problem of handling. If the location of the table is reasonably permanent, consider putting an outlet in the floor. Or you might arrange the furniture so one end of the coffee table is near a wall. If this space is too narrow for foot traffic, a cord on the floor is not much trouble.

If you have a rug with a latex backing, you can make a small slit and run the cord through and under. The slit can be easily repaired with plastic tape.

Double-duty Hi Fi is well suited to apartments, where space is usually at a premium. Room dividers, in particular, are useful to apartment dwellers for modifying the narrow or irregular rooms so frequently encountered.

Any of these units warrant consideration in a house as a second radio-phonograph for a family room or bedroom. A combination secretary Hi Fi, for example, would be a wonderful addition to a large bedroom or study.

In addition to being a means for manipulating what one sees—or doesn't see—grilles have been used primarily as a means of keeping out intruders while admitting light and air. In the process of being devised to admit light and air they have also been designed to affect and control the quantity and quality of both.

As a device used at openings, they have, through imaginative elaboration at the hands of designers and craftsmen, become a means of enriching and making a focal point out of openings, particularly when they are more simply handled—a fact that is forgotten in their present overuse as slipcovers.

As anyone who has traveled will testify, the interplay of light and substance created by them in either palace or cottage can be a continually fresh source of interest and attraction.

A Family of Sophisticated Evergreens

By OSCAR KEELING MOORE

• There is a family of pines that are among the world's most unusual trees. Perhaps they are unknown to you. If so, let us introduce the three species of them that are grown in the United States: the Norfolk Island pine (Araucaria excelsa), the monkey puzzle tree (Araucaria araucaria), and the bunya-bunya (Araucaria biduilli).

The three differ greatly in appearance, but they share certain characteristics. Their branches occur in tiers, each tier growing from the trunklike spokes in a wheel; they have thick, fleshy leaves, except for the monkey puzzle, which has scalelike leaves; and their seeds are edible. While all species of this family are native to the Southern Hemisphere, they occur in natural stands in widely separated areas of it.

Because of their very exotic character, some who would like to grow these evergreens may be puzzled in fitting them into their outdoor landscape design or into their indoor décor.

These evergreens are foreign in appearance when placed beside ordinary plants. They look "architectural," as if patterned and constructed from a blueprint. Because of this, they display a botanical formality and gain the sophistication and style that makes them conversation pieces. Should you undertake to grow one, you should know something about them, for they will undoubtedly draw much diversified comment.

mental plant, for it is a species of great value in ship-building. Of the three species of Araucarias that are grown in the United States, this one is the most tender. But in its early years it makes a wonderful indoor coniferous evergreen, in pots, tubs, planters, or other containers. As such, it can be grown anywhere. It is especially desirable because it can stand considerable abuse as a house plant.

In Florida, southern and central California, it is grown outdoors; in the latter state are to be found trees that have reached great heights. But in colder areas, it can be enjoyed indoors in the winter and summer. It may be moved outdoors to the terrace in summer or its pot sunk to half its depth in soil in the garden for over-summering. If taken outdoors, it should be placed in light shade—never in full sun—and watered regularly.

When grown indoors, your Norfolk Island pine can be viewed with the advantage of close proximity; this permits a more complete enjoyment of the plant's tiered layers of branches, with their soft needles in a distinctive shade of rich green. It bears needles of two types, juvenile and adult. The former are the needles of new growth that are borne on the young lateral branches; they are soft, incurved, and up to half an inch in length. The adult needles are on the older branches; they are densely placed, overlapping, incurved, and sharp-pointed.

The Norfolk Island pine is available in a number of varieties. Each has arresting characteristics. The variety known as glauca (Araucaria excelsa, var. glauca) or silver star is a blue-green form with white tip-ends in its youth. It is delightfully beautiful. The robusta is a strong-growing, large variety with

"Winterize" your trees...now!

You "winterize" your car for winter protection, and if you stop to think, you'll realize it's even more vital to protect your living, breathing trees from winter's killing effects.

Think what a sudden early ice storm could do! Heavily iced branches could crack and break. Burdened limbs could split beyond repair at weakened forks.

Davey experts, with years of experience and modern equipment, can prepare your trees to stand firmly against winter's worst. They will brace and cable weak forks and heavy limbs—now. Dead limbs should be pruned away. And now's an excellent time for Davey to give your trees the vitality for a glorious spring awakening—with a deep-root feeding of new Davey Arbor Green Improved Tree Food, with special humus forming material. Your trees will go right on feeding until the ground is frozen.

SOPHISTICATED EVERGREENS

deep green foliage. The virgata is unusual: Its tiered primary branches do not have secondary branches, or perhaps very short ones, giving it a sparse look. In the alba-spica, the needles at the ends are silvery-white.

THE gracilis variety is quite different. Being of dense, compact habit of growth, it verges on the hemlock in appearance in that its branches, even in young growth, tend to be somewhat pendent. And its branchlets, in growing from the main branches, do so in a feathery, frilled manner, without the tiered effect. In the other Norfolk Island pine varieties, the branchlets are horizontally flat in their growth and therefore lend the striking tiered appearance to the plant. This gives to these varieties a highly stylized distinctiveness which is lacking in the gracilis variety.

This brings us to two extremely interesting phenomena of growth in the Norfolk Island pine. It may be grown from seeds or cuttings. If grown from seeds, the spokelike layers of branches will be relatively far apart, giving the plant a skimpy appearance. But if grown from cuttings, the layers will be closer together and the plant much more beautiful.

Taking cuttings from any of the Araucarias reveals their second interesting growth phenomenon. This peculiarity also occurs in some other plants, including the Arabica species of coffee, which produces much of the world's coffee crop. It results from the Araucarias having dimorphic branches; that is, they have branches of two types. And, as a consequence, all cuttings must be taken from a leader, the upright-growing, upper tip of the main trunk. These will grow into perfectly symmetrical, compact plants with beautiful tiers of foliage. But if cuttings are taken from any wood other than the upright-growing leader, the plant that it produces will be misshapen, asymmetrical and ungainly.

Actually, the Araucarias are very accommodating, for once their growing tip or leader is cut, or if its leader accidentally should be broken or injured, a number of young erect-growing shoots will grow out to replace it. Still more cuttings can then be taken without fear of injuring the tree.

As a house plant, the Norfolk Island pine responds best to cool indoor treatment. Night temperatures preferably should not exceed 60° F. A cool sunporch is ideal, but a window in a coolish room will serve. Your pine should be kept in indirect light, for direct sun is likely to burn its foliage. It needs even light to keep it shapely—that is, light should strike the plant from all sides.

Your Norfolk Island pine should be planted in soil that contains considerable humus. And its soil should be kept moist, never allowed to become completely dry. Should your plant grow too tall to fit well into the indoor environment, its top can be air-layered. This will retard its upward growth and at the same time give you an additional young plant. You are likely to find an air layering kit at your garden-supply store, containing the needed supplies and instructions. Spray your Norfolk Islander regularly to prevent red spider and mealy bug infestation.

When your specimen reaches a height of some 40 inches, perhaps at about four years of age, you can expect its lower branches to start to droop somewhat. This is a normal occurrence and should not be any cause for concern.

Another special feature of a potted or tubbed Norfolk Island pine is that it makes a delightful small indoor Christmas tree. It can serve as a most attractive dining table centerpiece or as a festive focal point for a small table. If lights are to be placed on it, the tiny, miniature ones should be used as this pine's flexible branches will not support too much weight. Furthermore, miniature bulbs are not likely to give off enough heat to scorch its needles.

A Tree to Puzzle a Monkey

The monkey puzzle tree (Araucaria araucaria) ordinarily is not grown indoors as a pot plant. But it is more hardy than the Norfolk Island pine and can be grown outdoors in a sizable area in the United States. In the East, the monkey puzzle can be grown as far north as the Middle Atlantic states and even more northerly if grown in wind-protected areas. It has been grown near New York City. In the West, it can be grown along the entire length of our Pacific Coast and on Vancouver Island in Canada.

It prefers a climate and soil on the moist side. If planted on a loam that never becomes waterlogged, it will grow freely and retain its branches from the ground line for some 50 years or more.

However, if planted in a soil that is drivish or poor, or if grown in a smoke-laden atmosphere, its lower branches die back early in its life and the tree assumes a ragged appearance. It thrives best in a heavy loam soil in a relatively moist valley or in other positions that are sheltered from wind. Under cultivation, the monkey puzzle tree does not often exceed 20 feet in height, but in its natural environs on the western slopes of the Andes in Chile and in Tierra del Fuego it reaches heights of 100 feet.

The monkey puzzle is a startling tree—an attention-demanding botanical specimen, but not because of its beauty. Its appearance is so impressive that one is unlikely to forget it for some time. The tree's stiff, fleshy, leathery, sharp-pointed leaves—scales is a much better word for them—are borne directly upon the stems, branches, and trunk. This gives it a weird, skeletonlike appearance. Each scale stays green for from ten to 15 years, then turns brown and might remain on the tree for years thereafter.

The monkey puzzle grows into a pyramidal tree; its branches occur in tiers, with five branches growing from the tree's main trunk in each tier. The branches sweep upward gracefully until in old age they tend to turn downward. But its branches are so heavy and brittle that their beauty and symmetry are destroyed by breakage if the tree is grown in windy, exposed places.

In 1844, a large group of seeds of the monkey puzzle tree were carried from Chile to England. Many aged trees still are to be seen in England and Ireland as a consequence. But many are in extremely incongruous surroundings. However, this tree is so utterly exotic—that it is hard to place.

It was in Cornwall and not in South America where the monkey puzzle tree got its name. When a Cornwall owner of a specimen showed it to a friend, the latter remarked with dismay that a monkey would be puzzled if it attempted to climb it, so intricate is its skeletonlike framework of branches. Ever since, it has borne the name monkey puzzle.

The Bunya-Bunya

The Araucaria biduilli, or bunya-bunya, its poetic popular name, is an Australian member of this family of unusual pines. Like the Norfolk Island pine and monkey puzzle, it has a sophisticated habit of growth but it differs markedly from them. It has a narrow, pyramidal and symmetrical habit; it is densely branched, with lateral branches that are long and gracefully pendent. Its thick, stiff, shiny, dark-green leaves that taper to a point are borne in two rows along the branches.

In its native environment, the bunya-bunya grows to a height of 150 feet, with a trunk four feet in diameter. It is a fine softwood timber tree. But like the monkey puzzle, under cultivation it seldom exceeds 20 feet. It is used extensively as an ornamental outdoors in Southern and Central California and to a somewhat less extent in Florida. Occasionally, it is used in Washington, Oregon and along the Gulf Coast in outdoor situations. While it is one of the best and most handsome of specimens for pots, it has never gained the prominence in this use as has the Norfolk Island pine. Requirements for pot culture for both are the same.

An extraordinary feature of the mature bunya-bunya are its cones: They look like pineapples and weigh as much as 10 pounds. Each contains about 150 fleshy seeds. The seeds of the Araucarias that we have described are edible; they are flavorful and have a high fat content. I have seen numbers of people engaged in harvesting the seed of the monkey puzzle tree in Chile and of the poetically-beautiful candelabra-tree in Brazil, so as to consume them as a gourmet food. The candelabra-tree is the Paraná pine of Brazil which is another member of this amazing pine family. Technically, its name is Araucaria angustifolia. A few specimens of it have been grown from seed in Florida.

In the Coast District of Queensland, Australia, the government has set aside a stand of the bunya-bunya that covers a 40 to 80 mile tract for the natives who subsist on its seeds. None of these trees can be felled. Each family in each tribe is assigned certain trees for the harvest. These have been handed down within families for generation after generation as food-crop trees.

Fascinatingly enough, the bunya-bunya tree that supplies food for aborigines "down under" can serve as a highly sophisticated, exotic and decorative plant for we earthlings in our homes. Like its weird koala, platypus and kangaroo, Australia has given the world equally weird, other-planetlike flora.

Here's window beauty that puts money in the bank . . . for the Ponderosa Pine which frames the glass areas of windows provides 1,770 times the insulating value of aluminum. Heat leaks there are cut to a minimum, fuel costs reduced, condensation on sash and frames eliminated. In summer, too, windows of Ponderosa Pine block out heat as no metal can — help keep air-conditioning costs lower. Make sure that your new home, or your remodeling, includes the very practical beauty of Ponderosa Pine windows.

Every woman likes those "little extras" for the home of her dreams. Many times she is torn between those natural obligations of life and the luxuries she enjoys. Today . . . you too can complete your future family obligations by including an essential cemetery lot and the bronze memorial that goes with it. It can be accomplished on very small monthly payments and there is still money left for those luxuries. More important, there's a secure feeling knowing that your insurance money will be left for the purpose intended.

Why not call the local cemetery of your choice and make those necessary arrangements for a family cemetery lot? As for the bronze memorial you'll certainly desire the finest . . . an individually handcrafted Matthews Bronze Memorial. You have then met the obligation and the luxury of the finest.

Stories to read aloud at Christmas time

By LEE WILCOX

• The more the miracles of technology take charge of our homely tasks, the more precious become the personal, do-it-yourself acts that cost nothing but thinking and doing. Such a delight is reading aloud.

The Christmas season overflows with opportunities for this pastime. Give a quiet children's party at which entertainment is solely the reading aloud of an unfamiliar Christmas story. Set aside a family evening for reading aloud from favorite books and poems.

What to read? Let's let the familiar Dickens' Christmas Carol and O'Henry's Gift of the Magi rest. There are many other Christmas stories available. Almost every author has written about Christmas. Louisa May Alcott's Little Women begins with Christmas: "Christmas won't be Christmas without any presents," grumbled Jo, lying on the hearth rug."

Turn to the chapter on Christmas in Jan Struther's Mrs. Miniver. Even Thomas Mann has written about Christmas (in Buddenbrooks).

A recently published book, short enough to be read at one sitting, is The Fox at the Manger by P. L. Travers (author of the beloved Mary Poppins books). It tells of a postwar London Christmas service at St. Paul's and about the fox's gift to the Christ Child. It is moving and delightful.

Antoine de Saint Exupéry's The Little Prince speaks as clearly to children as to adults. The story is so multifaceted that different ages appreciate it in different ways. The prose is simple and poetic. Take two evenings to read it.

Several collections of Christmas stories are available. Christmas Tales for Reading Aloud has stories by Kate Douglas Wiggin, Daudet, and Clement Moore, among others. Frances Hodgson Burnett's "Behind the White Brick" from Sara Crewe and Other Tales is included. So are "A Miserable Merry Christmas" from The Autobiography of Lincoln Steffens, Frank Sullivan's "Crisp New Bills for Mrs. Teagle," and Eugene Field's splendid poem, "Jest 'Fore Christmas, I'm As Good As I Can Be."

The World's Greatest Christmas Stories lists Bret Harte, Thomas Hardy, Victor Hugo, Tolstoy, de Maupassant, and Selma Lagerlof among its contributors.

Reading aloud need not be limited to audiences of children. For adults, an unusual and charming selection is "Boston Christmas" from The Silent Traveler in Boston by Chiang Yee. Mr. Yee is an author, artist, and explorer. His observations of American Christmas customs and his comparisons to Chinese traditions will give you a fresh and amusing view of the season's festivities.

Christmas in Modern Story—An Anthology For Adults lists Agnes Turnbull and Elsie Siegmater among its authors.

Who are your favorite authors? Search among them and find Christmas in their writings to make your Christmas season even richer.

Ronson introduces...remarkable new candles. They never burn down.

antique white, ebony black or cardinal red enamel; or in satiny gold-tone or silver-tone. Suggested retail price, $24.50 per pair. (Includes candle holders and large-size Multi-Fill fuel injector.)

Ronson kept the romance of the candle. Threw out the wax and the wick. Added some ingenious ideas of their own. And the result: The Ronson Varaflame® Gas Candle, the greatest improvement in dining by candlelight since soft music. The Varaflame candle is tall. Tapered. Tipped with a real flame. But it burns with a brighter, cleaner flame than any other candle. No soot, no smoke, no waxy smell. It never drips, never burns down. Because this is a new kind of candle that burns butane, a gas.

Beneath its beautiful outer shell is a fuel cylinder that holds up to four hours of candlelight. (It even has a see-through fuel gauge.)

It's filled when you get it. And when it's time to refill, it fuels like a Ronson Varaflame lighter—from a Ronson Multi-Fill® injector. Clean, safe, easy. Fills completely in less than a minute.

And what candle ever had an adjustable flame? The Varaflame does.

A remarkable patented valve lets you turn the flame up or down. And it stays at the height you set it. High and bright for gay parties. Soft and low when it's dinner for two.

Set them out in the golden holders they come with. Or put them in your own. Varaflame candles are like your silver. A permanent part of your table.

You'll still be romancing with them a thousand candlelit dinners from now.

How to make the gold-embossed inserts that turn the insulating tumblers into Christmas decorations (see page 145)

Embossing is the simplest craft art imaginable, and the only essential material is base metal. Embossing is simply a matter of using a blunt point, as on a dull pencil, to "draw" your design on metal. Because of the metal thickness, the pressure of the point causes the metal to raise in relief. The more varied the lines of embossing are, the more glitter and rich space you add, for you are creating planes to refract light.

The Embossing Metal Kit contains 36 pieces of base metal (8 by 12", in six colors, gold, and silver) plus full instructions on embossing technique. From C Studios, 118 Evans St., New H Park, New York. $5 postpaid.

DRAWINGS BY EIKO YUA

Try a free-hand drawing experimenting with patterns and texture (above), then use a Thermo Tumbler insert to cut metal to size, letting the design run off the edge of the metal. Try cutting out sections, such as leaves or parts of flower petals, and back the "holes" with spots of color.

For a repeat pattern or a random design, try using the outline of a cookie cutter or any small object that would make an interesting shape when embossed across the metal.

Or try cutting a pretty design of cardboard (basic leaf shape or above) and fill sheet with tracing. Then fill in few or all of leaf shape with somewhat more intricate design.

Trace a cut at random or emboss free-hand across the metal. By overlapping the embossing and letting the design run off the edge, you give your design a more creative, free-style look.

KAHLUA is gushin'
And THAT,
In a word,
Is a PARTY!

Kahlúa's witty and wonderful recipe book features recipes from famous restaurants... eight big pages detail the making of such cocktail creations as the Black Russian, Kahlúa Sour and Mexican Grasshopper... such dessert delights as Crepes Bresilienne, Coupe Kahlúa and Kahlúa Mousse. # AMAZING CIRCUS of 6 GROWING ANIMALS

WATCH THEM

ONLY
$1.00

The Secret of Growth

Unbelievable! But it's true. Yes, a year and a half of scientific research has actually produced these delightful toy Growing Animals that will grow like mad right before your very eyes. Yes, grow faster and faster, bigger and bigger every day. Kids from 6 to 60 will be thrilled with excitement and delight, shriek with wild laughter as Ozzie the Ostrich grows his own full-feathered plume, Simba the Lion grows a long flowing mane, Smiley the Porcupine grows needles of hair, Sleepy the Hound Dog grows sad droopy ears, and Scamper the Squirrel grows a big bushy tail. And they keep growing bigger and bigger for weeks and weeks of thrills and excitement.

These amazing toy pets actually feed and start to grow as soon as you "lead" them to a plastic cup or glass of water. The secret is a new scientific process that releases a horticultural seed on a special absorbent porous material that starts the miracle of life and growth. No food or special care is required to grow your own animal circus and even give the little fellows "Haircuts" if you want. They are not available in stores — yet. You must order direct by mail. DON'T DELAY. Be the first in your neighborhood to own these delightful little Growing Animals, and watch your friends and neighbors gasp with wonder as they grow bigger before their eyes.

MISERY ENOUGH TO BREAK YOUR HEART

Su-Jen doesn't laugh or sing the way little girls should. But then she really doesn't have much to be happy about.

Her mother is dead—her father shiftless and cruel. High in the mountains of Taiwan (Formosa), Su-Jen herds goats all day.

She has never had a dress that wasn't torn, or a bright ribbon in her hair, and she cries when village kids laugh at her ragged clothing.

Inside her bamboo hut, Su-Jen and three other children share one soiled blanket. On cold nights they sleep with the goats.

For Su-Jen, life is a bitter struggle against disease and hunger. She is denied her deepest emotional needs—love of parents, security, education.

Yet Su-Jen is only one tragic reason why CCF has been helping needy youngsters for a quarter of a century. Her misery is enough to break your heart—but multiply Su-Jen by millions, and you begin to understand why urgent requests come daily from CCF's worldwide staff... Seoul, Korea, 10 babies abandoned every day... Vietnam, more war orphans... India... Hong Kong... Jordan... Athens.

You or your group can "adopt" a child equally as desperate as Su-Jen, for only $10 a month, in your choice of the 55 countries listed. Since 1938 Americans have found this to be the beginning of a warm personal friendship with a deserving child, making it possible today for CCF to assist over 43,000 children.

You will receive your child's personal history, a photo, the opportunity to exchange letters, Christmas cards, and love...

"Do-It-Yourself" THERMO-FINS

Turn Hot Water or Steam Pipes into Radiators in Minutes!

$2.98
plus 35¢ pp. & hd. per linear foot

Now you can use rooms that were too cold for anything but storage. Cellars, attics and garages become warm and comfortable when Thermo-Fins are attached to their hot water or steam pipes. The living area of your home is increased, comfort added without the tremendous expense of radiators and installation costs. Thermo-Fins turn existing pipes into radiators at a small fraction of radiator cost! A one-foot section of Thermo-Fins can be installed (or dismantled for shifting) in one minute using only a pair of pliers. There are no spacing or aligning problems because the interlocking sides do it for you!

TO ESTIMATE REQUIREMENTS—Six feet of Thermo-Fins will heat an average room 10' x 10'. Cellars require less—heating engineers recommend three feet for 10' x 10' area with additions as conditions require.

HOW TO MEASURE THE SIZE YOU NEED—Cut strip of paper and wrap around pipe. This gives you circumference of steel pipe or copper tubing. Find this size in circumference table below and specify number when ordering.

IT'S INCREDIBLE! FANTASTIC!

Nothing attached to the handwoven basket—it sits alone and without a sound, but when the snake notes are played on the snake charmer's pipe, the lid slides back far enough for the Black Cobra to squeeze and inch its way up—the more you play the louder he rises until he sets swaying and to slide as he will slither into the basket. ## "SLEEP and LEARN..."

your shortcut to success!

WHILE YOU SLEEP, BUILD YOUR VOCABULARY, LEARN LANGUAGES, TRAIN YOUR MEMORY, MASTER MATH, HISTORY, LITERATURE, ELIMINATE BAD HABITS, HELP YOURSELF IN ANY AREA YOU CHOOSE AND MOVE FORWARD TO A THRILLING NEW LIFE!

Science has long been aware that the subconscious never sleeps; your subconscious records every impression faithfully and plays the information back to you when you need it. Now it is possible to go directly to your subconscious mind—AND LEARN WHILE YOU ARE ASLEEP.

- A language professor at UCLA judged that a young man who had had just one week of sleep-learning in conversational French had absorbed the equivalent of a semester of classroom study!
- Famous personalities, among them, JOSE FERRER, RED BUTTONS AND EFREM ZIMBALIST JR. use the technique of sleep-learning for memory development—language study—and mind organization!
- A production executive in a large advertising agency memorized by sleep-learning methods, nearly 600 telephone numbers he used frequently!
- The Office of Strategic Services, during World War II, used the technique to teach its agents the accents, habits, customs, slang, etc., of the country to which they were to be sent to do espionage work!

- An oil company in Arabia uses sleep-learning for teaching English to its Arabian employees and Arabic to its American staff!
- A professor taught Greek to his 5 year old son with sleep-learning!

SLEEP-LEARNING HAS BROUGHT SUCCESS AND PERSONAL HAPPINESS TO A GREAT MANY PEOPLE. WHY NOT YOU TOO?

Reports from psychologists show that bad habits are easily broken with Sleep-Learning. Children have been stopped from thumb-sucking, nail-biting and bed-wetting habits. Overweight men and women are using sleep-learning to influence their sub-conscious to desire thinning foods and to avoid high caloric foods. Even chronic stutterers and alcoholics are being helped by Sleep-Learning. Through the technique of sleep-education you can fulfill your every desire, launch yourself on a wonderful new life of prosperous self-understanding and personal happiness!

READ "SLEEP AND LEARN" ON A 10 DAY TRIAL, THEN DECIDE!

Read this amazing cloth-bound book for 10 full days. Actually use and apply the simple techniques. ## How to hang Christmas decorations without damaging walls or ceilings

By DAVID X. MANNERS

■ You don't have to drive a single nail to decorate your house this Christmas. Here are the secrets of professional decorators that make nailing and other damaging methods unnecessary.

Decorators don't use nails. They have a variety of good alternates. One is double-coated tape. Double-coated (or double-faced) tape is tape with adhesive on both sides. Press the tape to the surface on which you want to hang the decoration. Its outer face is also sticky, so you can now adhere ribbon, garland, or cutout to it. Double-coated tape is the perfect way to adhere Christmas cards to a wall. The means of attachment doesn't show.

Lightweight double-coated cellophane tape (1"x125" roll, 49¢) won't harm any surface not harmed by ordinary cellophane tape. This includes wood, glass, metal, and most paint. But it may tend to take the printed surface off wallpaper, especially if allowed to remain well beyond the Christmas season. The longer it's on, the harder it sticks.

Thin Tapes

For most uses, the thinner the tape is, the better. Kleen-Stik (Kleen-Stik Products, Chicago 31) is a good thin variety. Heavy-duty double-coated cellophane and paper tapes, such as those recommended for adhering carpets to floors, paper on shelves, and lining in drawers, have extra strong adhesion. Use these with caution. They may pull paint off when you try to remove them. The thinner tapes are easier to handle. You can twist their flexible film into the thinnest of lines. At your choosing, they can be a ribbon of glue.

They can also be a ball. By making a loose ball of double-coated tape, and using it as your adhering point, you can make decorations stand out from the wall in bas relief. Three such balls were used in mounting the foil bells which we show in this issue. For some jobs you can create a useful fastening device by embedding a drapery hook in a ball. Double-coated cellophane tape is also good for adhering plastic snow to window ledges. Experiment. You'll find countless other uses.

Here's how to suspend Christmas-tree balls from the ceiling using double-coated tape. Cross two short lengths of tape at the point where each ball is to go. Thread the ribbon by which the ball will hang through the center of a decorative star (or other shape) and then press this star to the tape on the ceiling.

Scotch Mount

A new double-coated foam tape, Scotch Mount (3M), sticks like the strongest glue and does it on contact. It will support several pounds without pulling away. If it does pull off, it's the foam that tears apart. What remains of the foam on the wall surface can then be removed with a rubber eraser, and the surface itself is left intact. Well-adhered wallpaper or paint isn't harmed.

Scotch Mount is used principally by industry, but you can get it on special order from your stationer's. It comes in four thicknesses and in low or high density foam, either of which would be suitable for hanging decorations. A roll  $\frac{1}{2}$ " x 36 yards,  $1\frac{1}{2}$ " thickness, sells for about \$6.60. If this is more than you need or want, there is another possibility. You can get Scotch Mount on manufactured items which you, in turn, can use to hang your decorations.

Scotch Mount is being used on new self-stick metal wall tiles (Metal Tile Corp., Mineola, N.Y.). The tiles come in  $2\frac{1}{8}$ " x  $4\frac{1}{4}$ " and  $4\frac{1}{4}$ " x  $4\frac{1}{4}$ ", in copper, aluminum, stainless steel. At hardware stores and tile dealers (about \$3 a box). Drill a hole or two through a tile and slip a tie wire through before pressing the tile in place and you have a supporting escutcheon for even the heaviest decorations. The gleaming metal square is handsome in itself, or with tinsnips it can be trimmed to any appropriate shape.

Other Fasteners

There are other adhering devices.

"Hold-It" (Eberhard-Faber) is a gum-type fastener that makes it quick and easy to fasten lightweight things (paper cutouts, cards, ribbons) to walls. A box of two sticks, enough for a houseful of decorating, costs 49¢ at stationery counters. It won't hurt any wall surface. Each stick can be wadded into many small adhesive balls. You'll also find hanger hooks and eyelets on gummed tabs (Jiffy Hangers, 8 for 25¢, hold 15 lbs. Jiffy Eyelets, 6 for 19¢, hold 5 lbs.) You apply these by moistening the tab. After Christmas you can remove them by re-moistening the tab with a sponge.

For fastening to steel-surfaced appliances, hoods, window frames, consider magnets. There are strong disc-shaped magnets, 1" diameter, with a spring clip attached (4 for 98¢). You'll find them at hardware and variety stores (Vanderbilt Prod., Brooklyn 38, N.Y.).

For decorations at doorways and windows, instant-mounting café curtain rods make nails unnecessary. These rods work by tension. You compress the length of tube, put it in place inside door or window casing, and the spring inside the tube holds it there. They come in brass and white, are resilient-tipped to prevent damage. A  $\frac{3}{8}$ " rod, extending from 27" to 40" costs 69¢. For use with your own  $\frac{3}{8}$ " dowel rod of any length, you can get a pair of spring-loaded socket ends for 80¢. (All by Kirsch.)

For center-of-the-room hanging, you may be able to extend lines from window to window across the room. Put a tack in the upper edge of the top sash of a double-hung window, or merely close this window tight on the line. The line to use is 20 lb. nylon fish line (300' for 50¢ at sporting goods counters). For a nonshiny wire, get thin, green-bound florist wire, (Dennison, 30' for 20¢) or for the glint of gold, get metallic embroidery thread (Please turn to page 118)

Tension rods to hold window decorations

DRAWINGS BY GRAMBS MILLER

In every bottle, there may be a bit of Lord Nelson's personal choice

Or of William Pitt, George IV, Louis Napoleon, Wellington. Others, too.

Pedro Domecq has been making sherry for the world's leaders since 1730. And because his sherries today are a blend of many vintage years, some of the bottle you buy could be as old as the House of Pedro Domecq itself.

Blended as they are, Pedro Domecq Sherries achieve distinctive clarity, brilliance, and flavor, whether you lean toward the dry or the sweet.

La Ina, Spain's favorite sherry, is light, pale, very dry. It has been described as the driest sherry in the world. Thus: a cocktail sherry.

Double Century, on the other hand, is almost sweet (but not quite)—a more full-bodied sherry for all occasions. Britain's best seller, too.

Lean either way and you're well directed.

To La Ina, the cocktail sherry. Or, to Double Century, the all-occasion sherry.

HOW TO HANG CHRISTMAS DECORATIONS

(30 yards, 59¢, by Paragon). It's made with Mylar plastic, has high strength.

Supports as Decoration

You don't have to conceal supports. You can make a virtue of them, use them to some advantage. On a front door, a knocker is usually a good place for attaching a wreath. But what if the knocker is off-center? The answer is, compose to it. On a chimney breast that has two light fixtures you can suspend between them and make these supporting elements also a feature. Where you can't hide, let your rule be: capitalize. Ballustrades often make good points from which to stretch overhead supports for stairwell decorations. Or you may be able to insert a tension pole horizontally in the well.

If you are hanging decorations on a door, screen, or partition, it is better to extend the line over the top of the panel to the other side and tape it from the back. In that way the pull is distributed over the top edge, with less direct pull on the tape. When taping a line (or thread) in place, tape it once, then double the end of the line back and tape it again. It keeps the line from pulling out.

To support decorations of almost unlimited weight, or for things to tie lines to, you can use tension poles, available at hardware and department stores. Poles pressure-fit between floor and ceiling or between opposite walls. You can get a telescoping steel pole that extends from 32" to 9'2" for $2.49 (Sears). The poles themselves can be subject of a variety of decorative treatment. Four poles can create a center-of-the-room canopy or bower, completely independent of walls.

On glass, metal, plastic, laminate, tile, hardwood, and other smooth, nonporous surfaces you can use suction cups. Automobile supply stores have 3" replacement suction cups for automobile carriers (Set of 4, 75¢) which can be adapted to decorative purposes. Opposite to the cup end is a screw to which you can attach a wire or hang directly. At houseware counters you can get 2"-diameter cups in pastel colors with chrome hooks (E-Z Tach, 2 for 39¢, Stanley-Oliver, Chicago 121).

Cups do well on mirrored fireplaces and on doors with a glass panel. But if you fasten a vacuum cup on a porous surface, such as plaster or wallpaper, be prepared to hear your decorations come crashing down in the middle of the night.

You can use C-clamps. C-clamps and metal spring clamps (25¢ up at hardware stores), even clothespins (about 1¢ each) are useful for attaching without damage to plaster or wallpaper.

If you have a picture rail around a room, it can solve most of your hanging problems. If you have no such luck, you may still be able to find good wall attachment points by removing pictures and using the nails on which they have been supported. (If you haven't redecorated recently, you may have picture marks which impair this technique.)

Spare your wall by putting up a false wall. You can buy a 4'x8' or 4'x10' sheet of 3/8" insulating board for under $3. Stand it up against the wall and use it as a tackboard for affixing your Christmas decorations. Two of the panels, cut along the center into 2' widths, make a folding screen. Bind edges with colorful cloth tape, use tape for hinges.

When you have no other recourse but to hammer-in a new support, here's how you can do it with the least danger of leaving a noticeable scar. Don't use nails. Instead, use 5/8" aluminum-headed pushpins. These are not like ordinary bulletin-board push pins which are 3/8" or 1/2" long. The 5/8" pin can be driven into a wall far enough to give the support a nail might, but the hole it makes is pin-small. The shoulder on their head, when pushed flush against a wall surface, also gives added supporting strength. Usually, you can insert the pins with a twist of the wrist, but if necessary, the metal head can take a hammer tap. Get them at art supply stores. Push pins also are made with clear, white, red, yellow, green, and blue plastic heads.

To make push-in holes invisible, insert the pins in the crack where wall meets ceiling. This is a good technique when you are suspending a decoration above a doorway—a sheaf of pine boughs, for instance. When possible, insert pushpins at the mitered joint of moldings. Pins inserted in joints don't disturb paint, or make it flake off when removed.

To suspend a decoration in the center of the room, insert pushpins at the four corners where walls and ceiling intersect and stretch crossing nylon lines from corner to corner. Merry Christmas!

DECORATOR'S DIARY

Success stories from the files of a decorator, celebrating new home furnishings that made the successes possible

Every year, regular as Advent, I find myself summoned to attend upon Nancy Parsons, who started out being a client and has ended up being a good friend. I always know the reason behind this intimate pre-Noel tea party she puts on for the two of us. It has nothing to do with decoration. It's to tell me what Hank Parsons is going to give her for Christmas. And naturally I am the one who breaks the news to Hank, subtly, discreetly, when he asks me, as he inevitably will, what glittering bauble Nancy has set her heart on this year.

In the past I have made these disclosures to Hank over a clandestine lunch, following which we would drop into Tiffany's and add a sparkler or two to Nancy's bijou collection, for she devoutly believes that diamonds are a girl's best friend and Christmas present.

"What will it be this Yuletide?" I asked her this year as we went into the living room. "A tiara or stomacher? I should think that by now you've practically exhausted all categories." And then, carried away by my own tart wit, I stumbled awkwardly against the tremendous glass-top coffee table that stands before her seven-foot sofa. The table, I'm sorry to say, was one of our mutual brainstorms, designed at my direction a few years back.

"If I may make a suggestion," I said, rubbing my throbbing shin. "why don't you take a hammer to this brutish piece and ask Hank to give you a table in a nice soft wood? We might figure out a way to get a diamond or two embedded in it."

"Very clever," she said, without a smile. "but it happens that I have something quite like that in mind this year. I'll forego the jewelry in favor of a jewel of a new coffee table—if you can find one."

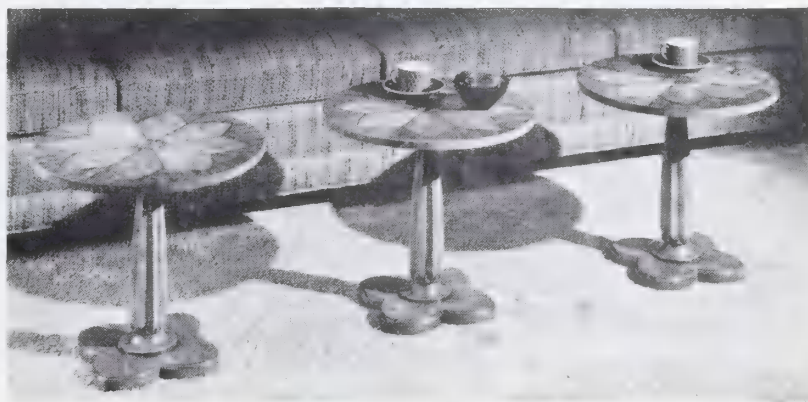

"Why only one?" I asked, suddenly visualizing a line-up of several small tables replacing the one big one. This is an excellent idea for servicing a long sofa, because you can walk between tables to sit down instead of having to squeeze in between sofa and table as if you were entering a pew. Moreover, the central sofa-sitter isn't the only one who can comfortably use an ashtray or put down a drink, because small tables provide the whole length of the sofa with convenient surfaces. And for someone like Nancy, who is forever putting on tea parties and buffet suppers, the same little tables can double in brass as individual eating tables.

"Don't be bashful," I said. "Ask for three separate pedestal tables and you'll never regret it."

"I'll buy that idea," said Nancy promptly, "but on condition that they are really something quite special."

cial—none of your ordinary tabourets, but pieces as pretty to look at as that enamel and diamond rose I was thinking of asking for."

"Leave everything to me, dear girl," I said, "and you'll be in for a surprise."

And come Christmas morning, she will be. For lined up before her sofa she will see a trio of the prettiest little accessory tables that ever came out of a furniture factory. The particular factory these came out of is Henredon, and the table is part of their new "Sequent" group of furniture. This group enthalls me because in its craftsmanship and design every piece has the kind of way-down-deep-inside beauty I thought only made-to-order furniture could have, yet you can easily find it in department stores and furniture shops.

The accessory pedestal table, which I've ordered in triplicate, stands 19 inches high on a quatrefoil base. The circular top, 20 inches in diameter, rises on a fluted column. In workmanship, detailing, and finish I'd have no trouble at all comparing it with jewelry. And since its figured American walnut top is a petal-like intaglio design, and its whole form suggests a flower on a stem, I feel I've delivered a worthy furniture equivalent of three jeweled roses—except for the price. And Hank was so pleased with that, that guess what else Nancy is getting for Christmas.

HOLD EVERYTHING. cabled Mrs. O'Reilly from Toledo — Toledo, Spain. FOUND RUG ALPUJARRA CHANGE STUDY COLORS TO MAGENTA AND RED REPEAT MAGENTA AND RED.

I might have known that her trip to Spain was going to produce some sort of convulsion in the decorating process of the O'Reilly house, for I had detected strong Hispanic leanings in the lady all along. The very house she had bought indicated this—it's one of those pseudo-Mediterranean stately homes of Long Island, built in the twenties, a place of tawny stucco and arched doorways, and big enough to be a movie set for The Mark of Zorro. She is given to auction-attendance and once returned with a pair of wrought-iron benches and a somber portrait of a white-ruched grandee who looks like Felipe Segundo. She claims he's the image of her Grandfather Lynch, who was born in Galway. Could be, I suppose, considering the Spanish Armada and its effect on the Irish population.

Grandfather Lynch, or whoever, and benches were supposed to be installed in the study, which is a snug little room off the marble hallway. It's impressively paneled in dark oak, with flush doors in Gothic linen-fold pattern concealing bookshelves, a tiny kitchenette, and the lady's sewing machine and work baskets. For all its woodwork, the room is surprisingly bright, lighted by a high, arched mullion window with a recessed window seat beneath it.

Upon her flurried departure for Spain, it was agreed that when she returned I should have lined up a refectory table to serve as desk and sewing table, swatches of fabric to cover sofa, armchairs and benches, and a suitable rug for the slate floor.

As good luck would have it, I hadn't done a thing when her cable arrived. Deliberately. Because I had already been through two abortive sessions of color-scheming. First she had dallied with quilted English chintz, all to be cabbage roses in yellow and brown. Then, after she had been to that auction, we moved into a crewel-work phase, concentrating on the blue-greens and pomegranate-reds in its traditional embroidered pattern. Then, just as the upholsterer's scissors was about to slash into a bolt of crewel that could have paid the mortgage on most houses, she called that off, saying that she'd be happier—or at least she thought she'd be happier—with more vibrant, more arresting colors.

"Segovia" reversible double-weave

If I hadn't had a certain amount of affection for this indecisive creature, I'd have quit long since, for it looked as if I'd be spending the rest of my professional life figuring out color schemes for her oak-paneled room.

But after that cable, the job was finished in no time flat. I didn't HOLD EVERYTHING at all. I marched right over to the Greeff Fabrics showroom, went directly to the racks of their new Hispania Collection of 18 Spanish-inspired fabrics, and before you could say "Alpujarra" (the j sounds like h), had ordered enough yardage of an upholstery fabric called "Segovia" to furnish the room.

What made it all so simple is that the fabric, both in pattern and weave, was inspired by an 18th-century rug, hand-woven in Alpujarra, the very place my lady had found her rug. I could count on her pattern's being similar because they've been perpetuating the same kind of damasky-baroque pattern for years in their double-woven, tassel-fringed rugs.

Magenta-on-red is a typical coloration, so it was only natural for it to be included in the fabric line. The 20"-wide pattern repeat is also in the same scale as the rugs. I could also have had the fabric in gold on moss green, ultramarine on green, red on natural, blue on natural, or slate blue on olive.

But what made this 54"-wide fabric such a relaxing choice was not only that it matched the rug. Its reversibility caught my eye at once, for in the weaving process the pattern on the reverse side of the fabric becomes red-on-magenta, so by turning the fabric over you have a different yet subtly similar fabric. Using the red background for the sofa and window valance and the magenta background for the armchairs and window seat, no other fabric was needed in the room except natural-color silk gauze for the window curtains, and some sharp green Thai silk to cover the iron benches and sofa cushions.

Except for the rug, the room was practically finished by the time Mrs. O'Reilly's plane came down in Idlewild. Needless to say, the rug was a perfect match, and the lady's mind is now perfectly at ease. She adores the room. Her husband tells me she spends all her sunny mornings there, with the door closed, presumably at work at the sewing machine or reading a good book. My suspicion is that she wears a mantilla and a rose in her teeth and practices on the castanets. —M.G.

A summertime trip to fairy-tale land

You too can live happily ever after!
Give yourself—or someone you want to enchant—
a postdated tour of Denmark's castled country

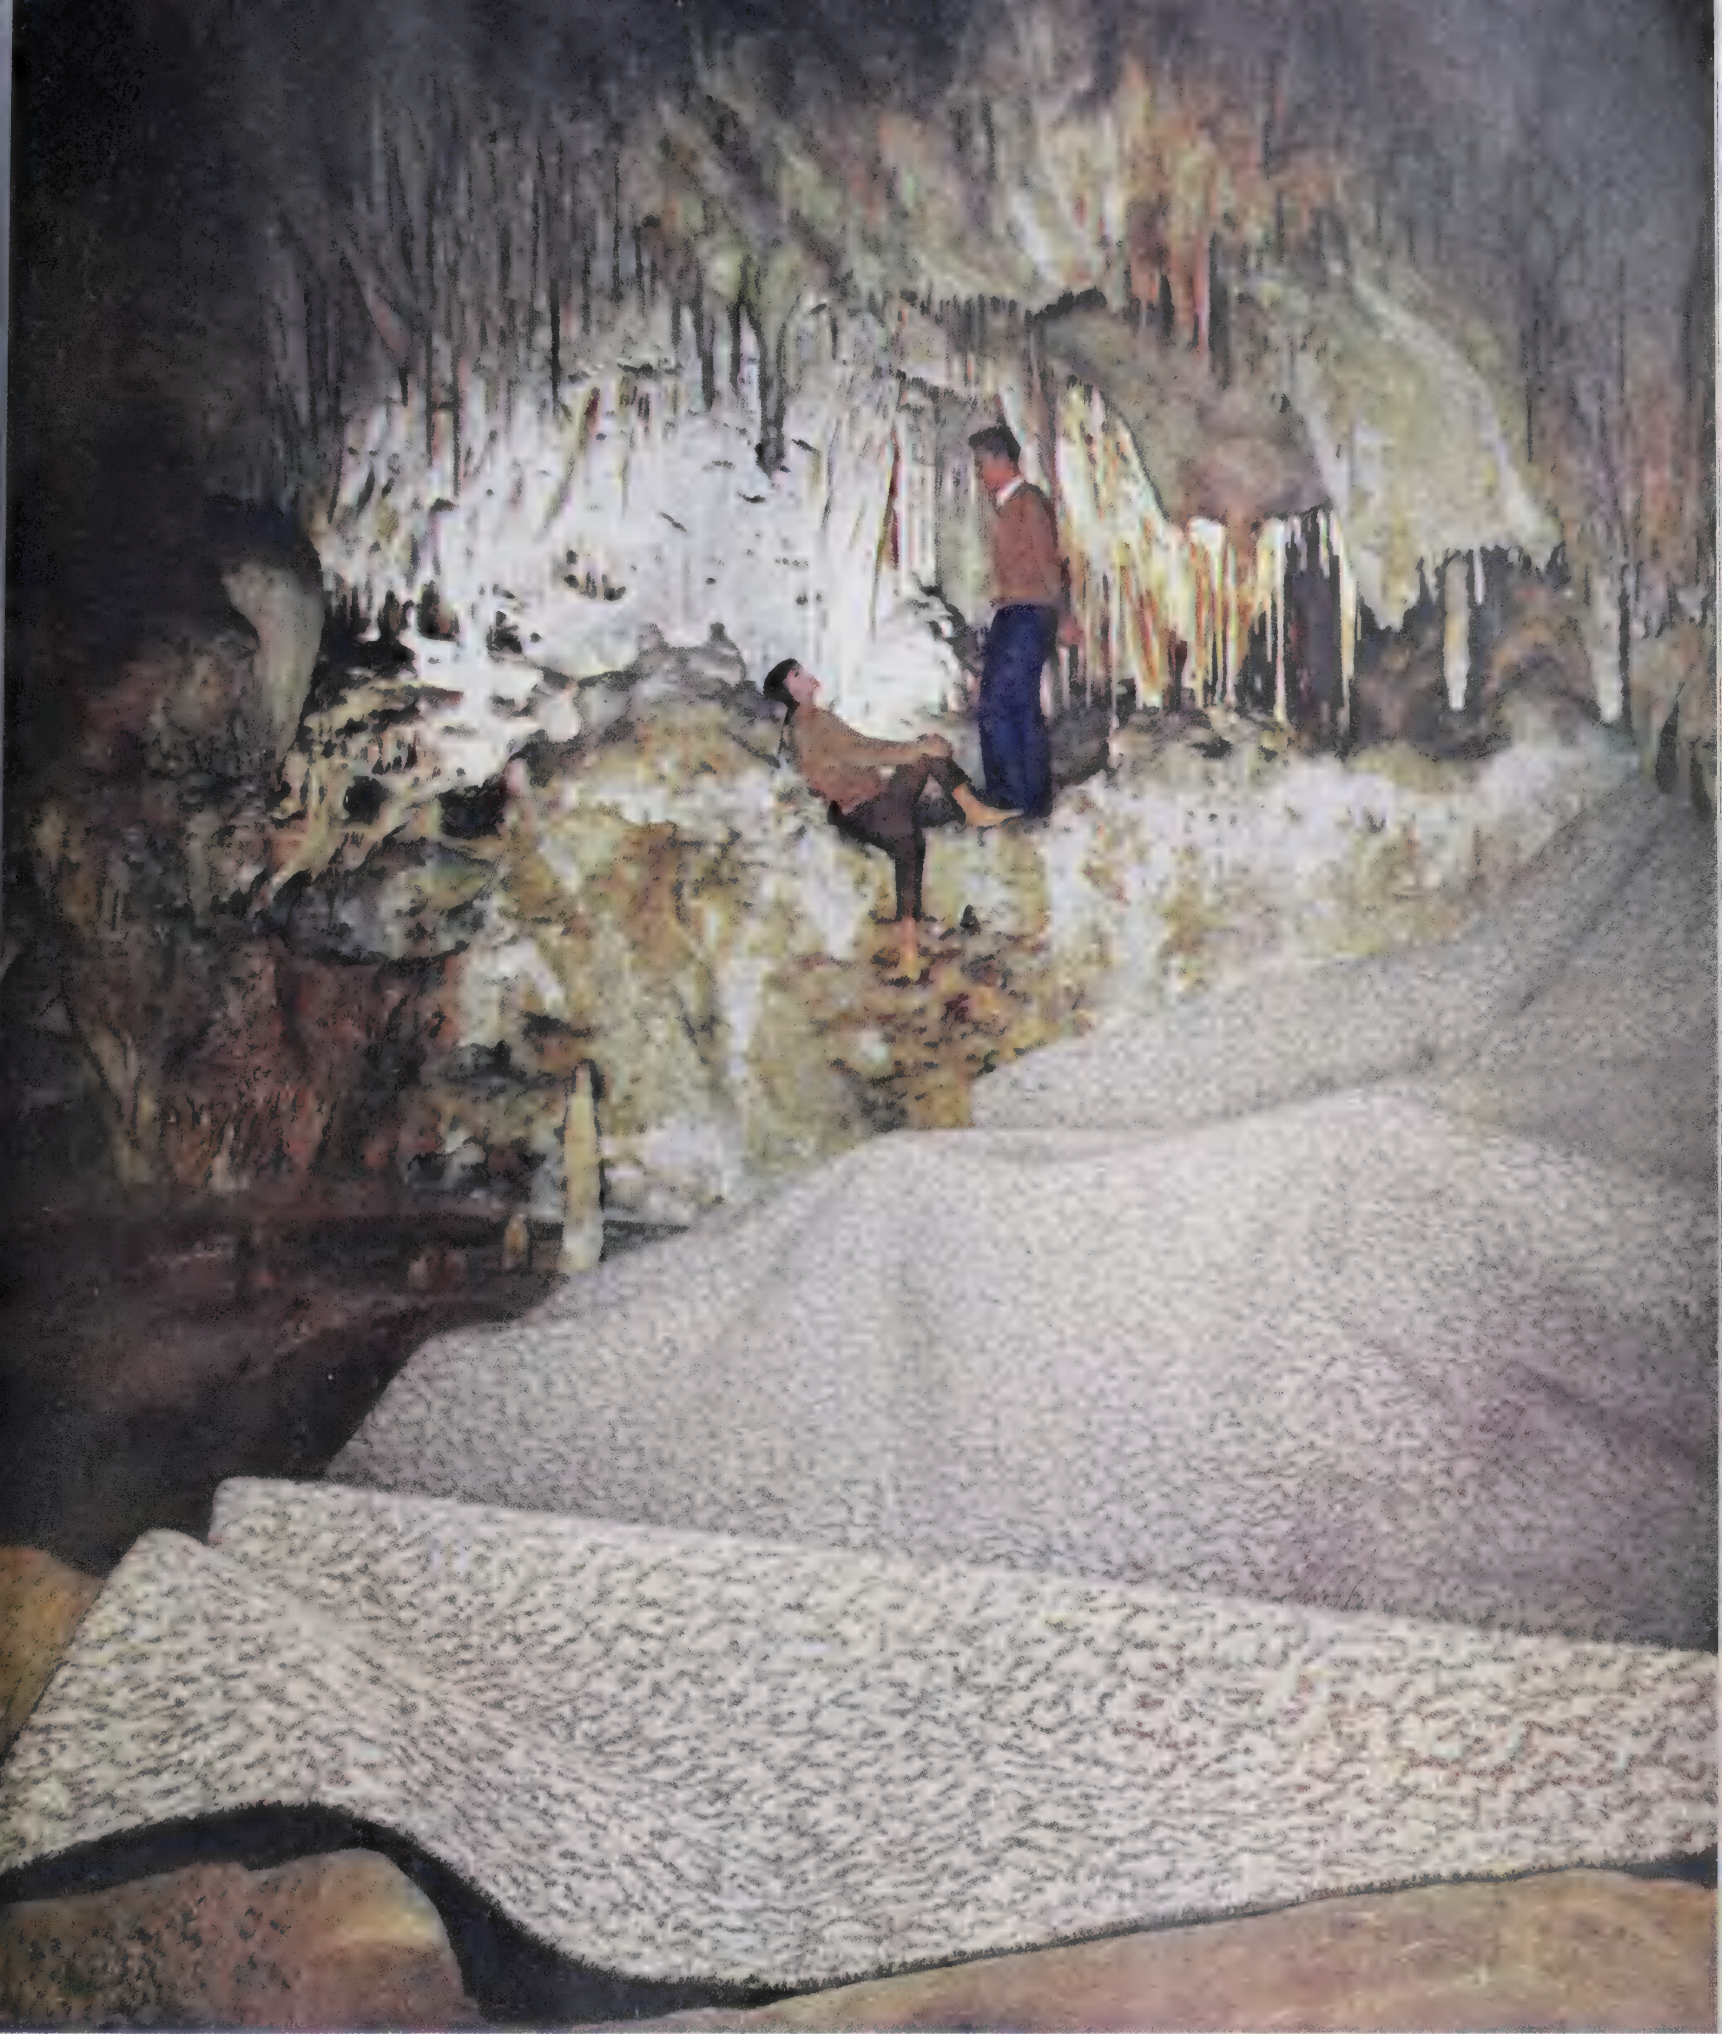

By MARION GOUGH

Tivoli is Copenhagen's self-contained fairyland of pleasure gardens. Visit it on a summer night as an enchanting start or finish to a fairy-tale tour through Sealand, Funen, Jutland.

● Once upon a time—last June, to be precise—we escaped to Denmark for four wondrous days in a country of meadowland and beech woods, where skylarks fill the sky with music by day and nightingales sing by night, where swans glide through the moated waters of turreted castles, and storks, back from their winter sojourn in Egypt, set up housekeeping on other people's chimney tops. The thatched farmhouse is there. So is the lath and plaster town, with twisting cobbled streets, cathedral tower, night watchman, and mannikin chimney sweep with high hat and broom.

The land has the peculiar innocence of the very old. Although the very real and often dark course of Danish history has been shaped here from the time of Harald the Blue-tooth to the gallant underground struggle of World War II, its aura of times past invites the imagination, suggests itself as the very stuff that fairy tales are made of. And fairy tales were indeed made here. It is the birthplace of Thumbelina, The Little Swineherd. (Please turn to page 130)

This is the most sensitive palette in the world. Not cold, tense, man-made colors...here, instead, is the deep deep richness that only time can burnish. Colors that bask with the warmth of the sand and earth, rocks and trees. Calming. Tranquilizing. Beautiful. A new idea in carpeting loomed to last: 'the naturals' collected in carpet by magee.

the Little Match Girl, the Ugly Duckling, the princes and princesses, wealthy merchants, and purehearted poor that Hans Christian Andersen brought to life in his immortal fairy tales. This is the story-teller's homeland, the very countryside that is mirrored in everything he wrote.

The fairy-tale circuit, accomplished by motor bus, takes you out of urbane Copenhagen into rural Sealand, over to the isle of Funen, and on through Jutland to Frederikshavn. Make it part of a grand Scandinavian excursion, if you will, for from Frederikshavn you can continue by ship to Norway or Sweden. Or you may return to Copenhagen from Aalborg by plane or overnight steamer. You can also do the tour in reverse, coming from Norway or Sweden. In this case you start from Frederikshavn, end up in Copenhagen.

You make the trip with about thirty other people and a guide; you are completely spoon-fed, hand-conducted, with first-class meals and hotel accommodations reserved. It is, in short, a package tour, the kind of arrangement sophisticated travelers usually shy away from. But, take our word for it, this tour bears no resemblance to any other of its kind. For us it added up to four idyllic days, artfully and imaginatively planned, a virtual seminar of Danish history, folklore, food and literature. To newcomers to Denmark, we'd recommend it as something to do straight off, even before sampling the bright lights of Copenhagen. Individualists could cover the same ground on their own in a rented car, but it would take powerful preliminary study to substitute for the on-the-spot lectures of the literate and knowledgeable tour guides. And who would read the fairy tales along the way? Bennett Tours, organizers of this inspired excursion, have given the guided tour a completely new and attractive face.

OUR OWN journey started from Copenhagen in the eight o'clock freshness of a June morning, took us through Sealand to Roskilde, Denmark's medieval capital. The 12th-century cathedral was our first inkling of the pageantry of Denmark's history. For the Danish kings and their queens are entombed here, with art and epitaphs celebrating their deeds. Far from sepulchral, it's fascinating, especially the Chapel of Christian IV. That 17th-century monarch, who literally fought his own battles, is pictured with a wounded eye bandaged with a handkerchief. Look sharp and you'll see that the handkerchief edging is of Tønderknipling, the netlike lace still made in Tønder in Jutland (see the same royal handkerchief in Rosenberg Castle and buy the same lace in Copenhagen's Den Permanente). As a reminder that all that's automated is not necessarily 20th-century, observe the cathedral's Per Døer and Kirsten Kimers clock, made in 1500. Its figures strike the time while an equestrian St. George and horse rear up and kill the dragon.

By the time you're ready for aftens, as the Danes call lunch, you've passed through the medieval town of Ringsted, and Slagelse, where young Mr. Andersen went to school, and arrived at Holsskov to take the world's most capacious ferry boat across the Great Belt to the island of Funen. The breezy trip takes about an hour, deliciously whiled away over a lunch of smørrebrød—those beautiful Danish open-face sandwiches.

First stop on the Garden Island of Funen is at Nyborg Castle, oldest stronghold in Scandinavia. It calls up pictures of knights in convocation, roistering banquets, and colorful medieval intrigue. It's furnished as it might have been in 1170, but the bold black and white checkerboard pattern on its painted stone walls suggests there's nothing new under the design sun. And note that even in those rough old days "conveniences" were delicately provided in secluded little chambers cut into the walls.

AND NOW the fairy-tale atmosphere intensifies as the road takes you through Funen's chateau country, past castles and manor houses, set in sylvan parks. With any gift at all for make-believe, you can see them as they were in older times, pennants streaming from their pointed towers to the sound of silver trumpets and the pounding of horses' hoofs.

Loveliest of all is Egeskov, and, best of all, it's visitable. Rosy-pink and multitowered, it is the very prototype of the enchanted palace, seeming to float, unattainably, in its surrounding broad lake-moat, while white swans drift silently, elegantly by.

It has its own sad legend—a Odense, with its quaint, trailing streets and half-timber houses, is where Andersen was born. Next morning you visit the humble house where he lived. In the museum next door, among the Andersen memorabilia, see the famous top hat, umbrella and traveling case of this homeless, perpetually traveling man. "To travel," he said, "is to live," words which endear him to us almost more than his fairy tales. Don't miss his travel journals, illustrated with perceptive ex tempore sketches—nor the paper cutouts with which he amused the children of his friends.

BY NOON you have crossed from Funen to the mainland of Jutland, over the great bridge that spans the Little Belt. High spot of this day is Ribe, Denmark's oldest town, where the rooftop stork roosts now tangle with TV antennae, and traffic jams streets laid out in 948. The cathedral carillon still chimes the folksong of good Queen Dagmar, most beloved of the ancient queens. At the Dagmar Hotel, built in 1581, lunch is a lavish, flower-laden meal we will always remember.

Since it's Dagmar's town, the souvenir to buy is Dagmar's cross, traditionally given to girl babies at their christening. (In gold, from $6 to $14.) We shopped at W. Pirchert's. Amber jewelry here is great, and there's a tempting stock of pins and earrings made of gold-encased natural greenery, like parsley, beech and rose leaves.

En route to Vejle—to spend the night at the beautifully run, surprisingly named Australia Hotel (the stuffed kangaroo in the lobby salutes the land that made the owner prosperous)—you stop off at Jelling and the 10th-century runic stones raised to honor Gorm, oldest of Denmark's recorded kings, and his Viking confreres.

The third day's journey takes you to Silkeborg. In the museum you gaze upon the leathery remains of an Iron Age man—2000 years in a nearby Tollund peat bog preserved him. But a local day nursery affords a more entrancing exhibit. Be on Silkeborg's main street about 11 A.M. when some of the latter-day, more vigorous Danes (age two to three) are wheeled out for their airing, ten blossom-cheeked tow-heads to a wagonload. You'll never forget it.

You are now in the lake-silvered Highlands, the Danes' own vacationland, with Denmark's loftiest peak, the Himmelbjerget or Sky Mountain, looming all of 500 feet above you. A lake launch trip gives you a taste of the woods-water-and-sun placidity that makes summer so precious to a Nordic.

AFTER this, on to Aarhus, Denmark's second largest city, a hotbed of modernity in bustle and architecture (see the town hall and the university), but here they have reconstructed a 16-century Danish town as a living museum. Called Den Gamle By (The Old Town), it's a rebuilding of actual houses and shops collected from all parts of the country. You lunch in the excellent modern restaurant here, then spend the afternoon visiting the houses and shops of the past. You dine and spend the night in the grand-manner Royal Hotel.

Having had three days of touring, you might end your fairy-tale junket in Aarhus, but some of the best is still to come. For on the morning of the fourth day you have the fun of visiting Elbeltoft, the quaint and tiny seaside capital of Mols, where the people pride themselves on being "characters," and where cattle bathe in the salt water fjords.

After this, a visit to Rosenholm Castle, the Renaissance seat of those Rosenkrantz who were friends of Hamlet. Heading north you go through Hvidsten, perhaps to stop for coffee and cake at Gudrun's inn. Far more than an inn, it's a symbol of Danish valor, for its owner and his sons paid with their lives for their part in the Danish Resistance.

Next stop, heart-warming to all Americans, is the hilly heath of Rebild where Danes and Danish-Americans congregate each year to celebrate the Fourth of July. You take lunch here at the Rold Storkro.

About 4 P.M. we reached Aalborg, home of aquavit (the only civilized way to eat potatoes, they say), and the happy ending of the fairy-tale tour for us. Later that evening we crossed the Kattegat via United Steamship to Copenhagen ($7.20 for first class cabin).

Fairy-Tale Tours are summer-time affairs, running from May to September. Tariffs, which include all costs are: $82 for three days; $89 for four days. You can book through your travel agent. For more information write Bennett Tours, Inc., 290 Madison Ave., New York.

The Season To Be Merry

Now Christmas crowns the year, and celebration is in order. 'Tis the season to be merry; time to fling wide the door, to spread the feast, to raise the glass and let the heart speak. Ever at such a time, hospitality is the glory of the house, the opportunity to create an occasion. Superimposed on home's swept and garnished demeanor, burnished treasures, and familiar household gods, the twinkling fantasies of Christmas dispel all humdrum. The house is a stage, set for a party. We are carried out of our everyday selves—eager, sentient, loving and giving, and caparisoned for pleasure. Perhaps only with the offering of hospitality are the finite and infinite aspects of good will so nearly fused into reality.

Who does not cherish the progress of a party? Consider the breathless moment before the curtain rises, when one moves in restless splendor from room to room—lighting candles, encouraging the hearthfire to a proper display of brilliance, straightening box or bibelot, tweaking a flower into perfection, surprising flushed cheeks and shining eyes in the mirror. Then the first peal of the bell—glad cries of welcome, glancing kisses, cold noses, the aroma of wool and fur and the contrast of one's own warm lamplight with the star-struck winter dark. Follows fast the rising crescendo of conversation, persistent hubbub of new arrivals, flicker of wit, flash of smiles, exchange of gallant compliments, the feminine rustle of silk, the male shine of polished leather—music, laughter, talk—and the recognition of some new facet in some old friend. How fast the time goes! How much too soon the struggle into coats and boots begins, with the little knot of people engaged in lingering farewells at the door, while the cold draft freshens smoky rooms. Motors cough and sputter; good-byes float backward on the trenchant air. Someone is singing "Good Night, Ladies!"

Quiet settles on the happy disarray. Around the dying fire one's nearest and dearest kick off their slippers. Potions are sweetened and in the fragrance of woodsmoke and wraiths of spice and perfume, a babble of impressions is exchanged. What is there, in the realm of pure delight so rarely come upon, that ever quite compares to a good party?

The house is a stage, set for a party, and we are carried out of ourselves.

Great Tradition

—but with the work shared by four

Few entertainments are more satisfying than an elegant, formal dinner for eight congenial people. Such an occasion allows for the savoring of fine cooking and the bouquets of wines, brings out the most exquisite accoutrements of the house and the prettiest dresses, and almost invariably inspires the mellow communication which sets in during the progress of a noble repast.

The thought of providing such a civilized occasion appeals to the hospitable soul, but the realization of the amount of work involved in producing a number of masterpieces simultaneously is apt to deter the bravest spirit. The solution is to find three like-minded couples and make an eightsome, moving the party from house to house. Each hostess accepts the responsibility for one magnificent course and the setting for her entry. The first provides cocktails and soup; the second serves the fish course; the third offers the main course; the fourth, dessert, coffee, and liqueurs.

Such a party can be a triumph if all four hostesses are seriously interested in standards of cuisine. A casual casserole has no place on a formal menu, and a feeling for style is intrinsic in the plan. The collaboration should seek to produce the quality and atmosphere of a great dinner, which in these days of servantless households is virtually impossible singled-handed.

The friends should decide among themselves which courses are best suited to their special talents. Hopefully, all four houses will be in striking distance of each other. If they are in walking distance, so much the better. Transportation should be planned in advance, and the hazards of winter taken into account. It may be foolhardy to depend on taxis for conveyance in the city.

The hostess who is responsible for only one course will be able to achieve serenity and give some attention to the mood and atmosphere of her portion of the dinner party, so that genuine conversation will develop. The flowers, the candles, the subdued lights, the soft music in the background, the warmth of welcome and the avoidance of banalities in the talk are all a part of gastronomic gaiety.

The menu and recipes that follow are practical yet will elicit the admiration of any gourmet. (Please turn the page)

HOUSE NUMBER 1: Cocktails, Hors d'Oeuvres, Soup

As the curtain raiser for this culinary drama, your house should literally be only a prelude, though an exciting one. Be somewhat miserly with the number of your hors d'oeuvres, and set a limit of not more than half an hour for cocktails. Thus, the party may set out for their next course with appetites whetted.

Timing is not a big problem for you and the hors d'oeuvres. Your soup, all finished except for the last touches, needs but a moment's attention. (Please turn the page)

A tree trimming party for the young in person and the young in heart

● Christmas is for children, and the holidays that do not include at some time a round-eyed company whose incandescence beggars tree lights and spun glass can be dull and dreary indeed. So whoever you are and whatever your family situation, give a tree-trimming party to fete the rising generation—and get the tree trimmed! This is an ideal entertainment for the warmhearted spinster, bachelor uncle, indulgent godmother, doting grandmother, or childless couple, and a good way to entertain your children's friends.

Late afternoon is a proper time for the mixed-age group indicated for a tree-trimming. Teen-agers who may patronize siblings at any other time display Christian charity toward their little brothers and sisters under the benign pre-Christmas influence. All moppets will be in seventh heaven.

Your evergreen should be firmly fixed on its base, located where you intend to keep it, and repairs to its shape accomplished, but it should be bare of ornament when the party begins. Have all tools and equipment readily available, such as shears, scissors, pliers, hammer, fine wire, yarn, ornament hangers, needle and thread, glue, wastebasket, a low, steady ladder, and perhaps a few adhesive bandages.

Stringing of lights and major climbing stunts should be the province of the taller boys. Provide each with a basket of variegated ornaments. If you have notions about the design of the tree, couch them in the most diplomatic terms. It is better if you permit guests to experiment. Small children should have exactly the same number of like ornaments. One spectacular angel can cause discord. Play carols on the phonograph and provide a few edible sugar plums.

Since young children must be called for, plan a libation for callers while decorators are served their refreshments.

(Right) Fashionaire Slip-In Thermo Tumblers come with paper inserts, but we suggest making your own out of the gold metal featured in our November issue. Using the embossing technique, you can custom-make many designs (see page 32).

(Opposite) When children arrive for the trimming party, the tree should be fixed in its stand, properly positioned but bare of any ornaments. If each child has his own basket of ornaments to hang, there'll be less fighting over who gets each one.

Let them put on their own play

A new kind of make-believe, done only with paper, cardboard, and foil, can be more fun for children, easier on parents

By EPSIE KINARD

● It's easy for children to put on their own Christmas play. Even a seven-year-old can make costumes and props out of paper bags, wax paper, aluminum foil, and other stuff around the house. Children's costumes made of these materials save hours of laborious work and often have more theatrical dash than the usual converted lace curtains.

Children don't have to learn lines any more, which also makes it easier for them to put on a play. Reciting cut-and-dried dialogue has given way to the freer practice of ad-libbing the story as they go along. This new freedom encourages children to choose their own plays, to adapt favorite stories, and even to make up their own.

Some of the most successful children's plays are done in pantomime, which dispenses with dialogue. All a pantomime needs is good action, strong visual characters, and a simple story line told by a narrator. Pantomime can be effective without narration, but told in a child's own words narration adds immeasurably to the charm of a play. And who can deny that a narrator, aged seven or eight, may be a future college-team debater or a U.S. Senator now making his public debut?

The Tree Angel, presented in lively scenes (with a working script) on the next three pages, is the kind of play children themselves can put on. It represents a new kind of theater. With only a little help from a parent or an interested older child, quite young children can produce this play. The performers shown here are children of Westport, Connecticut families, whose ages run from two to twelve. The oldest child is the play's director.

In order to have parts for all visiting cousins and friends, The Tree Angel uses as many trees as there are children. It is only one of many stories with expandable casts from which your children might choose a play. (See our suggestions for other plays at the end of the article.)

The Tree Angel, as seen here, was especially prepared for HOUSE BEAUTIFUL by The Paper Bag Players. This talented group of young off-Broadway actors has created a unique theater style for children. At their home theater in New York (The Henry Street Playhouse) and on a country-wide tour, this troupe has enchanted fantasy-loving five-to-twelve-year-olds with their fresh, free-wheeling approach.

The costumes and props in our photographs are similar to the ones used by The Paper Bag Players themselves. Although they are made of simple, everyday materials, they have great dash, and even young children can make them.

Trees: Use different shades of green poster board, large enough to conceal a child. Or use cardboard or the sides of corrugated boxes, painted green or covered with green paper. Cut in tiers, with holes for faces.

Angel's robe, trumpet, and Wood Chopper's axe: Cover cut-out cardboard with heavy-duty foil, taped down on back.

Wood Chopper's windbreaker: Use paper garment bag from dry cleaner. Cut holes for head and arms, shorten to jacket length, and slit front.

Wood Chopper's other clothing: Let him wear his flannel shirt, winter pants, snow boots or galoshes, and his Dad's hunting cap or a cap he can make from a paper bag. His rope can be any piece that's handy.

Other clothes for Trees and Angel: Leotards are ideal. What they wear underneath can be seen behind cardboard façades, and should be uniform. Second choice: stretch tights and matching pullovers.

Suggestions for other plays: For the most fun and value, children should try their hand at making up their own plays. But until they get the hang of it, here is a list of favorite stories from which "paper bag" plays can be adapted:

The Jumping Beans by Judith Martin and Remy Charlip, two of The Paper Bag Players. (Knopf, $1.95.)

Where is Everybody? by Remy Charlip. (Scott, $2.75.)

The Frowning Prince by Crockett Johnson. (Harper & Row, $1.95.)

The Carrot Seed by Ruth Krauss. (Harper & Row, $2.25.)

The Little Man Dressed in Red by Carl Raymund. (Harper & Row, $2.75.)

Caps for Sale by Esphyr Slobodkina. (Scott, $2.75.)

Little Blue, Little Yellow by Leo Lionni. (Obolensky, $3.50.)

What Do You Say, Dear? by Sesyle Joslyn. (Scott, $2.75.)

The Snow Image: A Child's Miracle. From Collected Short Stories of Nathaniel Hawthorne. (Doubleday, $4.95.)

The Princess and the Pea. From Seven Tales of Hans Christian Andersen. (Harper & Row, $3.95.)

Pierre by Maurice Sendak. One of four books in Nutshell Library. (Harper & Row, $2.95 for set.)

Four Fur Feet by Margaret Wise Brown. (Scott, $3.25.)

The Tree Angel, presented on the next three pages, was especially adapted for House Beautiful from the original play put on by The Paper Bag Players. The story is published as an illustrated book by Alfred A. Knopf, Inc. under the title The Tree Angel. Copyright © 1962 by Judith Martin and Remy Charlip.

THE TREE ANGEL

A play in six scenes taking place
in a quiet forest

CAST

Angel, Wood Chopper,
Four Trees (or as many as there are children)

Narrator
(optional)

SCENE I: As
our play opens,
four little pines are huddled together whispering,
“How cold it is!
What an empty sky!
Think it’s going to snow? Hark!
Hark! Here comes our Tree Angel!” “Is everything all right?” she asks.
Her favorite pines tell her everything is fine.
The Tree Angel has many chores to do and goes away.

The children are kneeling in order to conceal their feet.

The Tree Angel enters and leaves.

Enter and exit the Wood Chopper.

SCENE II: Loud footsteps and a gruff voice are heard. It is a Wood Chopper, who cries “Ho! Ho!” as he sees the Trees. “What a beautiful clump of pines! I’ll chop them all down.” The Trees are horrified. But the Wood Chopper chops them down, one by one. Each falls to the earth with a heavy thud. The Wood Chopper leaves to get his rope.

Re-enter Angel.

SCENE III: The Trees cry: "I don't like being upside down. I don't want to be carried away. I wish our Angel were here. I wish. I wish." Hearing their wish, the Angel comes flying. But how can she help them escape their fate?

The Angel decides to give them feet! At a "Ta-ta-ta" of her trumpet, each arises and tries out his new feet.

Wood Chopper re-enters, finds Trees resting.

SCENE V: The Trees, not used to walking, enter very tired and decide to rest. The Wood Chopper comes upon them. "Those Trees look very familiar."

But they make such ugly faces, the Wood Chopper thinks they must be different Trees. They are not as good-looking as the others, but he decides to cut them down anyway.

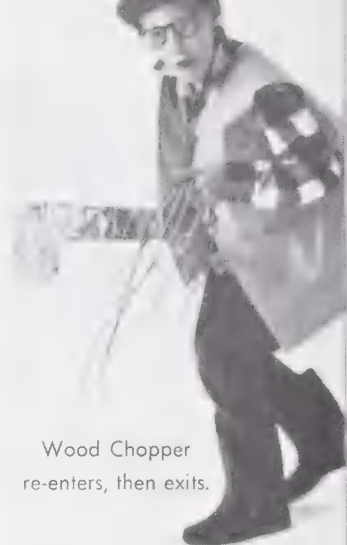

They wiggle their toes.
Jump up and down.
Cross their legs, all shrieking with delight.

Exit Angel and Trees.

"Hurry off to another part of the forest," she tells them. "If the Wood Chopper comes, make ugly faces so he won't want you."

Wood Chopper re-enters, then exits.

SCENE IV: The Wood Chopper is back with his rope. "But where are the Trees? Why, they're gone. I'm sure I left them here. I'll have to chop down another bunch."

Dramatize the chase.

He raises his axe, and to his amazement, the Trees jump up. He tries again. They jump up again. Now, the Trees run. The Wood Chopper runs after them. They lead him a merry chase, until finally he's exhausted and confused. "But Trees can't run," he says, scratching his head. "I give up. I'm going home."

ALL PHOTOGRAPHS BY BETTY KUHNER

SCENE VI: The Trees are very pleased. "It's much nicer here! And what a lovely view!" The Tree Angel returns, and in their sweet voices the Trees thank her. "Ah, but this new hill is very, very lovely," they murmur.

THE END

A portfolio of Christmas Music not always heard

Music has been intrinsic in Christmas since the beginning:

*"When that our Savior Christ was born
In Bethlehem, that fair city,
To save mankind that was forlorn
The angels sang continually;
Thus saints and angels in Heaven above
And godly men do music love."*

■ No other subject has so perennially inspired composers, so that there exists a large body of musical composition dedicated to the sacred season. There are also unnumbered hymns and carols, often of unknown origin and reaching backward to antiquity, which express mankind's love and joy, faith and hope, and yearning for peace on earth.

Music is invariably in the air at Christmastime, but due to an unfortunate tendency on the part of merchants and salesmen of all sorts to woo us with the familiar, some of the loveliest—folk-music—and even some of the greatest compositions—are bleated, blared, crooned, and corrupted by every radio and TV set. They pour out of public address systems and loudspeakers in every department store, terminal, elevator, restaurant—even in the streets.

It is a sentimental cliché to insist that good music always remain fresh, that the more often we hear it the more wonderful it becomes. Sooner or later familiarity breeds contempt, especially when the artists involved for novelty's sake, commit crimes against the composer's intentions.

It seems unlikely that anything can be done to halt the tarnishing of old favorites by overuse, but the Christmas music you play for yourself or give to your friends will be more satisfying if it has not suffered from too much commercial exploitation. When choosing the music, to which we are all seasonably susceptible, it is important to guard against lavishly packaged discs of tonal tinsel. There are some examples of Christmas music which are characterized by admirable and stylistically authentic performances. In view of the sheer abundance of new recordings or repackaged older recordings, duplication and competing claims which make such selections frustrating and confusing, HOUSE BEAUTIFUL has made up a list of this music, with reasons given for each choice. (Stereo record numbers indicated by italics.)

A Festival of Lessons and Carols. A memorable service has been sung in King's College Chapel, at Cambridge, annually on Christmas Eve for almost half a century. The program contains both familiar and rare items drawn from ancient sources, sung by the all-male choir in the truest English tradition. Of this sort of music there is none greater. Symbolizing the joy and worship of all at Christmas, the service is a model of dignity, expressiveness, and style. David Willcocks conducts. London CM 5523; OS-25119.

A Christmas Offering. Leontyne Price at the height of her vocal powers interprets a collection of traditional songs and art songs with rare distinction. Her remarkably clear enunciation of the texts is another facet of her compelling artistry. On the same high plane is the conducting of Herbert von Karajan, which makes the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra and choruses under his direction worthy partners in this admirable disc. London 5644; OS-25280.

Music of the Medieval Court and Countryside. Here is another of several unique collections for the connoisseur, performed by The New York Pro Musica and conducted by Noah Greenberg. This is an ensemble of vocalists and instrumentalists whose meticulous and scholarly performances of Renaissance and Medieval masterpieces have won international acclaim. A delightful choice of long-neglected Christmas music written between 1200 and 1700 provides unusual variety and appeal. Decca DL 9400.

Holy, Holy, Holy. Suave and skillful singing of familiar and less familiar carols by the Roger Wagner Chorale, whose readings come out eminently right. (Please turn to page 197)

Tables are already set when the young guests arrive. Large peppermint-striped candle is surrounded by actual candy canes, hung on edge of supporting bowl. Centerpiece is finished with rim of snowballs of angel-food rounds rolled in coconut. Christmas plates, Santa salts and peppers complete the setting.

Main course (since it's just like the kids' favorite, a hot dog) is a large 4" diameter bologna scored to look like a yule log. Bologna is broiled before serving, then sliced at the table. Kids put their own rolls, load up with catsup, mustard, relish. Add hot like scalloped potatoes, and a mixed salad.

● Giving a party for children who are in the ten-to-twelve-year-old age bracket, and just a little bit grown up, takes a little tight-rope walking. They are still delighted by most childish things, but they are also very pleased to see that effort and planning has made a cohesive whole. In other words, at that age they are old enough to get the over-all drift of a party theme, while younger children see only the parts of the party.

A candy-cane mixer falls nicely between the phases of childhood and adolescent sophistication. I got the idea for this one by finding some attractive little candy-cane pens, costing about 29 cents each, in my local stationery store. I decided to use these as favors, and that led me to the obvious: Use candy canes as décor and as part of the dessert. (If you cannot find the pens locally, write to Spencer's House of Cards in Carmel, California.)

I feel very strongly that you should consult with your children about plans and the menu for the party. When I ask my youngsters what they would like to eat, they answer, "Oh, hot dogs or hamburgers." You know they're in a kind of rut, but it lets you make your food simple, and they feel that they have participated in the planning.

First off, I will have edible decorations on the tables. So I fix the dessert as the centerpiece (shown at left). Then I buy a giant bologna, score it, and make it look like a Christmas log—the good old yule log; the kids think this is very clever of me. So the main course is the bologna, which to me is just a giant hot dog. With it you can have a hot dish, such as scalloped potatoes, plus a good green salad, if your kids happen to like it.

I used red on the tables. It can be either felt or a washable material like corduroy. I have found handsome candy-cane candles at Candles of Carmel (Carmel, Calif.). If you cannot find them in your locality, the shop will send them to you. Take a large beer goblet or a glass compote and put the candy-cane candle in it, fastening it down firmly with florist's clay. (I use Plastite Green Clay, which is waterproof. It's made by the Golden Gate Co., Oakland 8, Calif.)

Put this beer goblet on a plate and surround it with snowball cakes. Hang candy canes around the beer goblet so that it makes a solid ring around the glass; then at the base put in the snowballs made of angel-food cake rounds, covered with a yummy, creamy, dreamy icing, then rolled in coconut. You can either put them in red paper cups or get red foil and make your own cups. It's sort of fun to stick the candy canes into the snowballs; then, when the kids help themselves, the snowballs sit perkily on the plates. The youngsters will probably want ice cream, so carry out the theme with peppermint-stick ice cream.

I have collected Christmas-tree plates, which always appear at holiday time. They are good for all ages, but if you feel Christmas-tree plates are too obvious for these young people, get the holly-decorated plates or candy-cane plates. Most china shops carry (Please turn to page 189)

The Lovely Leaping

How and when to do it

By EPSIE KINARD

● The bold experimenter can turn everyday fare into a connoisseur's repertoire. Try flaming roast chicken, or pork chops with peach or apricot brandy. Try bourbon and cognac on the lowly hamburger. Try a fruit brandy or Grand Marnier on candied sweet potatoes. According to Alice B. Toklas, a cup of burning brandy in the chicken pan is the most elegant way to fry chicken. Try mellow old rum or gin on baked bananas.

Flambéeing has been developed as a visual and culinary art in the world's great restaurants, whose maîtres d'hôtel, adding ingredients from diverse bottles with tender solicitude and all but incantation, give virtuoso performances at the chafing dish. A certain amount of drama should always accompany flambéeing, and the nonprofessional should approach the matter in this spirit, making it into a ceremony.

How do you do flambéeing successfully? Working with a dish that fails to ignite is a terrible anticlimax. On the other hand, a flame that smokes the ceiling, singes eyelashes, and threatens draperies is not only unsuccessful but dangerous. Over-flaming the food can ruin it, producing a harsh taste of liquor or scorch, obliterating its true flavor.

Follow the two basic rules for flambéeing (below) and you can master the technique, which applies to any recipe you want to try. Experiment as much as you want to with flavors, but don't experiment with the technique.

Rule No. 1: Use high-proof spirits. The higher they are, the better. (See list on page 200 showing the proofs of various liquors and liqueurs and the foods with which they are compatible.) If liqueurs aren't high enough proof to blaze, combine them with liquors in the 80-151-proof range.

Rule No. 2: Use a preheated pan and have it hot. The food in it must be boiling-hot.

If you use a chafing dish, crepes pan, or other utensil fueled by canned heat or denatured alcohol, put your blazer pan directly over a high flame. For chafing-dish cooking, preheating the liquor makes for more successful flaming. To light the liquor, use a taper or a fireplace match. With a match, don't ignite until the sulphur has burned off. If you use a thermostatic pan, preheat it to 300 degrees F.

Before adding liquor (which you don't have to preheat for an electrical appliance), turn control dial down to 200 degrees F.

After mastering these basic rules, there are as many approaches to finesse in flambéeing to consider—and to try out if you want to perfect your technique—as there are maîtres d'hôtel, captains, and chefs who practice it. Every flambeur has developed his own style.

Albert Stockli, responsible for the subdued and elegant style at New York's Four Seasons restaurant, achieves a modest flame by reducing the amount of liquor—to one ounce per person for an entree, to two ounces for a dessert—and by lowering the heat under the pan. Liquor here is never preheated, as other experts advocate. In order to subdue flames, spirits are never poured into a caramelizing sauce until it stops bubbling (boiling syrup is capable of extreme heat). This finesse results in an elegant flame (about three inches high) and in sensitive food's being saved from the abuse of overflaming.

At all Restaurant Associates restaurants, over which Chef Director Stockli keeps a vice-presidential eye, four liquors are combined to make a uniquely elegant mixture for flambéeing desserts. This mixture of rum and brandy (two dry liquors) and Grand Marnier and Cointreau (two sweet, orange-flavored liqueurs) in equal parts is kept on-the-ready in every restaurant where flambéeing is done. This combination of spirits is a balance of high-proof strength and flavor of dry and sweet, carefully tested for perfect compatibility with most of the desserts served. The exceptions are chocolate- or coffee-flavored desserts. For flaming these, Kahlua or another spicy, (Please turn to page 198)

To serve a Christmas goose in a blaze of glory, flambé it. Flaming opens pores of fowl to admit delicious liquor flavors, and cuts fat. Roast goose as usual; bring to table hot, on warm platter. Combine and heat ½ cup brandy, ¼ cup Grand Marnier. Ladle in spoonfuls over goose, ignite, and continue ladling until flame dies. # A pizza party for the college crowd

you'll suddenly see many ways to give this old favorite a new twist

By VIRGINIA STANTON

● Where is a better place to let the college crowd have a party than in the kitchen-family room? They may come in to watch the holiday sports events on TV. And what's better to serve them than pizza!

Thinking about pizza makes me realize how our eating habits have changed in the last few years. Pizza has become a "must" in our lives, being anything from an hors d'oeuvres to the main course. It's popular with every age group from the littlest guy on up. Pizza is quite easy to make, and it can have a lot of variety.

I will give you a recipe for a simple one that most of my children just love. A pizza is a glorified hot sandwich, remember—I think that's the way I would describe it. You may build it up with any seasonings and you may use almost anything at hand. It is an absolutely marvelous way to use leftover vegetables and bits of meat left in the refrigerator.

There are several ready-made tomato sauces (as well as package mixes) that you may buy for pizza glorification. But I prefer to expend a little extra care. First off, I have the bakery make the dough for me. It is bread dough. That simplifies my life quite a bit. I have them make several, and then I freeze them. Then I use tomato paste, for the kids prefer my brew to the one I can buy in a tin. This is the recipe for the one that is pictured on the opposite page.

Pizza in a 12-inch pan and serving four people

- 2 tablespoons olive oil
- 2 tablespoons butter
- 4 green onions (tops and all, finely minced)
- 1 teaspoon sugar
- 6 large mushrooms

Put the olive oil and butter into a fry pan and melt it; add the green onions and sugar. Sauté them slowly, so that they will not get brown. After they have been cooking for a minute or two, add your six mushrooms, which have been washed and sliced. Cook 2 or 3 more minutes. Set aside and prepare your tomato sauce.

- 2 six-ounce cans tomato paste
- 1½ teaspoons oregano, mashed in the hand
- 1 teaspoon basil, mashed in the hand
- 1 teaspoon M.S.G.
- ¼ teaspoon salt
- ⅛ teaspoon pepper
- 1 rounded teaspoon brown sugar
- 1 teaspoon Chef Howald's All 'N' One Seasoning Salt
- 1 tablespoon olive oil

Put the tomato paste into a bowl and add the dried seasonings, mixing all well. Then dribble in the tablespoon of olive oil. When the mushrooms and green onions are ready, add those to the tomato paste and mix them well. This mixture may be made a day or two in advance and kept in the refrigerator. Now you are ready to assemble your pizza.

For the flavoring for the meat, you may use anything that you have at hand. But for me there are three "musts"—Mozzarella cheese, Cheddar cheese, and pepperoni. You may also use smoked sausages, Canadian bacon, salami, and shellfish. Any leftover turkey is also excellent to use in your pizza.

Spread the filling of tomato paste over your dough; then arrange with care whatever meat you are using. Canadian bacon is excellent. Smoked sausages are marvelous. I use Oscar Mayer's smoky sausages. For pepperoni, the one I prefer is Swift's Premium Old World Variety, thinly sliced. I would use the pepperoni and the smoky sausage with whatever other meat you are putting in, such as turkey, etc. Salami is also excellent, as are garlic sausages. After you have assembled these in a design, put the larger meat pieces around the outside—remember these must be thinly sliced—then scatter a quarter-pound of Mozzarella cheese and a quarter-pound of grated sharp (Please turn to page 195)

A Wine Fiesta

—a new kind of party for year-end budgets

By VIRGINIA STANTON

● Holiday time is when the budget creaks and groans more than any other time of the year, for it has had more strains put upon it. But don't let that prevent you from socializing with a few good friends.

Here's the outline for a party that will have a point—namely, wine tasting. And the food will be acceptable to the most unadventurous, with the added virtue of being inexpensive. It is really a glamorized version—menu-wise—of spaghetti and meat balls. But the presentation takes it out of the mundane, and the serious tasting of six kinds of red wine is given a proper background by the food. If the prospect of buying six wines makes you wince, perhaps you can ask each couple to bring a wine. But you had better give them a guide line on what to buy, so they won't all bring Chianti or Pinot Noir. An interesting diversity would be one Italian red wine (such as Chianti or Bardolino), one French (such as Burgundy or Bordeaux), two from California, and two from the New York Finger Lakes area. Ask your liquor dealer for his best recommendations. The European wines should be resting in your kitchen in a wine cradle for several days before the party, so the sediment can drop down. (This is not so necessary for American wines, which have little or no sediment.) All should be opened (or uncorked) about an hour before they are to be served, for a short exposure to the air is supposed to heighten the flavor of red wine.

The presentation that makes the difference is the Hamburger Tree, cooked on a funnel to give it the form of a Christmas tree. But first a word about the pre-dinner hours.

Let me caution you against using too-tart things for the hors d'oeuvres. Vinegary things are too strong and kill the ability of the palate to savor the wine. Even the olives I serve I rinse off and then soak in olive oil with perhaps a touch of garlic. Cheese nibblers, cracker nibblers, and celery and carrot sticks are (Please turn to page 194)

The preparations for a wine-tasting party can be quite simple. The glasses are important. They should be large enough, like the balloon-shaped goblets seen at right, so that they can be partly filled to gather the bouquet. At the top of the page, a hamburger tree, suggested to accompany the wine tasting.

The Party for All Ages

Why it's back — How to give one

By MARVA SHEARER
House Beautiful's Family Editor

● There are Christmas parties and Christmas parties, but the nicest kind of holiday entertaining, one that will be more in evidence this season, is the "whole-family" party.

I make this prediction with assurance, not only because of our family's growing stack of invitations, but also because I hear from hostesses from various parts of the country. More and more, there is a return to sharing Christmas pleasures with entire families, and certainly one of the delights of the holiday time is going to parties.

Why is there a swing to a more traditional, grass-roots type of party-giving at this time of the year? The truth is that throughout the year parents and children are going more places and doing more things together. The all-family party at Christmas is just another expression of this trend.

It only takes one hostess in a community to start a family-party trend. She is usually someone with the courage to mix guests of all ages, with the conviction that Christmas and children go together. So she gives an old-fashioned, bring-the-kids party. It's a success. After this initial breakthrough, her friends take heart and try something similar in their homes the following year. In this way the practice snowballs until such gatherings are crowding out the cocktail parties and sit-down dinners.

The fun in this form of entertaining is that there are so many delightful possibilities for family parties—all quite different and all quite wonderful.

The easiest party, and one of the most agreeable, is simply to open your doors to friends and their families. Just let them mingle and mill about in the congenial atmosphere of your home. In this case, you set out two punchbowls—alcoholic and nonalcoholic—cookie trays, and a free choice of entertainment possibilities. The adult guests are left alone to visit with other parents. The children are expected to amuse themselves, but you can give them some help.

For the youngest guests, pull out your own children's outgrown blocks, trains, and dolls. You may put these toys around the tree where youngsters may play undisturbed while parents stand proudly by: "Yes, the redhead is mine," or "The pair in the matching outfits belong to us."

For the older, more sophisticated children there is usually a playroom or porch with games of chess, backgammon, pool, or table tennis. Even if they can't follow chess moves or handle a pool cue, the teen-age girls seem to enjoy watching the teen-age boys. And there are always one or two shy individualists who bury their heads in a comic book.

The sum and substance of such a mixed party is that everyone, young and old, has a fine time because they may do just as they please. They may be happily gregarious or sit quietly on the sidelines. They may participate or not. Everyone feels unconstrained, unforced, and quite at home.

At the opposite end of the party spectrum is the carefully planned, thoroughly organized, perfect-down-to-the-smallest-detail affair. Here, there is some form of amusement for every age and interest. For the very young it may be movie cartoons or a strolling clown Santa Claus. For the pre-teens, who are apt to be unruly, a piñata or treasure hunt is the ideal activity. The high-school and college ages like to be separate from the other guests. A hostess who arranges an area just for them, with space to dance to a record player or to hear a folk-singing group, can be sure that her party will be a teen-age smash.

The adults at such festivities are probably the easiest to please. They enjoy watching their children alongside those of their friends. Their amusement comes from observing who has braces and who has discarded them; who is fatter, thinner, taller than a year ago; (Please turn the page)

Throughout the country the most popular family Christmas party is some sort of musicale. Whether the amateur talent is based on uninhibited soloists, family combos, or group singing, a party with some strong notes is bound to be a success.

who has blossomed into a beauty and who is sporting a beard. In short, they like comparing their offspring with their contemporaries'.

But they also appreciate delicious food, interesting drinks, and good company. Men, in particular, notice the attention given to the choice of refreshments and the intellectual level of the guests. One of the sincerest and most flattering compliments I ever heard was paid by a matter-of-fact lawyer, who said to his hostess: "What I enjoy most about your parties is that I'm sure to find someone I can talk to." With these words he made all her thought, her work, and her careful effort worthwhile.

It goes without saying that such planned-in-detail affairs are more work and more expense, but they are also more exciting and memorable for the guests. As a once-a-year extravaganza, this type of family party takes the cake because nothing is left to chance or the possibility of boredom.

Throughout the country, however, the most popular family Christmas party is some sort of musicale. It can be a quite informal song fest or a more elaborate program planned around amateur talent. In either case, it only takes a little food and drink to carry this kind of party. Also, many areas have community sings. Before or after the event is an easy and obvious time for an all-family party.

Another wonderful basis for a holiday celebration is a neighborhood roundup of people you know and nod to all year but don't see socially. The more impromptu it is, the better. Often people come with reservations but stay to have a fine time; they find they have a lot in common besides their address. The result of this restrained neighborliness is often so rewarding it is taken up by another family at holiday time the following year.

How about a gift-swapping party? Every year I look forward to one given by one of my oldest friends. For ages, she and I exchanged Christmas presents. In time, our children exchanged presents, and presumably our grandchildren would have done so too, if she hadn't put an end to it. She stopped the whole nonsense by holding an annual gift-swapping party.

She invites other old friends besides me to come with their families and to bring a wrapped present for someone their own sex and approximate age. The gifts must cost no more than a dollar or so. After the gifts are distributed, to appropriate age-groups, everyone is encouraged to swap his present for something he'd rather have. Some gifts are swapped over and over again.

The oldest established family party we attend has been a tradition since the first years of our marriage. It started during World War II and has continued for 20 years as a quasi-reunion of old Army buddies. Like many good things that are worth repeating, this annual affair did not start with any intention of making it an institution. It was simply a beautiful Christmas party, given by a hospitable couple, who lived in a home instead of a furnished apartment like the rest of us. A similar party could reunite almost any group—school, office, tour, or team—that you knew well at one time but which has since dispersed.

Lastly, there is the wonderful post-Christmas party given each year by a Southern California family whose children are in high school and college. It's a New Year's Day open house. The invitation reads, "Come before the game time and bring the gang." The idea is that guests will watch the Rose Bowl and other football games on TV and stay on into the evening. It has become such a popular, not-to-be-missed event with the back-from-school set, as well as "old grads," that the family recently added a party room to take care of the ever-increasing number of guests from surrounding communities.

These are a mere sampling of the types of family parties that will be in full swing this holiday season. They are popping up like crocuses in the snow. For readers who may decide to give one of these parties for the first time, here are a few suggestions that may make the going easier.

The pitfalls or social faux pas are often more comical than disastrous, but forewarned is forearmed. For example, be prepared to have at least one tot, of table height, who quietly tries to down all the unfinished drinks he can reach. (Hopefully, some mother will spot him before any serious consequences arise.) Frequently there is an overindulged child who clutches and screams and wants to take home the toys he's been playing with. (Having an inexpensive substitute will stop that tantrum.) The quickest way to put an end to any fight is to have your own children separate the batters. Young referees are far more effective than adults. Then there are the strange, sophomoric types, with beard and pipe, who stand around eying their elders with bored tolerance. (It's best to treat them seriously; by next year they'll probably be back to normal.) And lastly, there are the overanxious parents who keep checking up on their children to see if they're "mixing." (Introduce the parent to a fascinating beauty with a problem, and they'll let the children enjoy themselves on their own terms.)

Before you consider sending out any invitations, make sure that you have the right Christmas spirit, considerable stamina, and your own family's enthusiastic cooperation. Your attitude has to be based on the firm belief that Christmas and children go hand in hand. Without this conviction, no family party can get off the launching pad. It also takes steady nerves and strong limbs to plan for, shop for, and make room for the three-ring aspects of a large gathering of diverse ages. And you'll need help—your own children will have to be junior hosts and hostesses.

With a roam-around, mix-the-generations party, the food and drink can be quite informal. Two punch bowls, one alcoholic and one non, will take care of everyone. If you choose the pick-up food carefully, both young and old can feast on it.

The piano, Julie, lasts a long time

Dear Julie,

• Your grandmother and I are delighted to learn that you are going to shop for a new piano. Sooner or later, this was bound to happen. Of course we will advise—in great detail and with our usual authoritativeness.

So you decide to shop for a piano. The investment will be considerable, and you want your decision to be a wise one. This piano will be your first, and if you choose well, it is likely to serve you as long as you live.

As you start out on your shopping expedition, you are riding in your third automobile. The experience of buying a car has become almost routine. Each time that you reinspect the products of General Motors, Ford, Chrysler, and the others, a very important part of the decision has already been made. You want a convertible and nothing else—or you don't want a convertible under any circumstances. You have a practical need that only a "wagon" will satisfy—or you have a parking problem that rules out any thought of getting a wagon. You want four doors for the convenience and comfort of people like your arthritic grandparents—or you don't want rear doors that can be opened by young children. These thoroughly personal decisions are made in advance, and they greatly simplify the buying process.

The same kind of decisions must be made in the selection of this first piano, and similarly they should be made before getting involved in the happy confusion of choosing between one brand name and another. What model? What size? What horsepower? What use? What location? What period?

The parallel with automobile buying ends right here. The racing cars at Indianapolis and, for that matter, sports cars in general are almost miniature when compared with the average family car. The pianos you hear played by Cliburn and Horowitz, whether in concert or on your high-fidelity phonograph, are without exception the largest size of instrument regularly manufactured.

Why? Big pianos are designed big in order to accommodate long strings, and if other elements of design, material, and construction are equal, the piano with the longest strings is the best piano. Concert grands are nine feet long. A twelve-foot piano, if such an instrument existed, would have its advantages. On the nine-foot grand, the lowest note is produced from a string with a vibrating length of about eighty inches. (On the small household piano, the lowest note sounds at the same pitch, but there is room inside the case for no more than forty- or fifty-inch strings.) For practical reasons of space and required sound, very few nine-foot grands find their way into the modern American home.

The pitch at which any string will vibrate depends upon its length, its tightness, and its weight. The fifty-inch string that sounds the lowest note of the ultra-compact vertical piano must be less tight and considerably heavier than the eighty-inch string that vibrates at the same pitch. Quite obviously the two strings will not sound alike, and there are three ways in which their difference shows itself.

1. Basic horsepower. The longer, lighter, and tighter string can be struck so as to produce greater volume of tone. On the concert stage, particularly against the background of a full symphony orchestra, this factor is important. In the home, there is no great auditorium space to fill and no hundred other musicians to compete with.

2. Sustaining power. The tight-light-long string will sustain its tone for a longer period of time. (Any note on the lower half of a good six-foot grand will sustain for thirty seconds before it sinks through the threshold of audibility.) Again, this is important to the professional. It is desirable though not as important on the home piano.

3. Noise ratio. The striking impact that starts any piano tone includes a certain amount of nonmusical noise. The actual amount of this noise is about the same on any good piano in good condition, but the proportion of its conspicuousness will be less if the string energized by the impact is long, light, tight—and therefore super-responsive.

These advantages of long strings are not limited to the low end of the piano. The highest strings on any piano are about two inches long, and from this fixed, standardized minimum the strings increase quite uniformly in length to a maximum at the low end which is limited only by the size of the case. For this reason, the strings in the very important middle of a big piano are appreciably longer than the same middle strings of a small piano, and the above three advantages apply here just as much as in the low bass notes. Music can be at the heart of Christmas fun and the focus of Christmas memories to come. These young musicians will fondly recall the year they put on a show. For other children, records will build new and pleasant Christmas associations.

Music can help make Christmas magic for children

By LEE WILCOX

● The happy memories that are brought to life at Christmas are compounded of many ingredients—the smell of a fir tree, the glitter of tinsel, the taste of a holiday treat, the chill of a snowy night—but of all of them, perhaps the most evocative is the sound of Christmas music. For your children, it will be the same. The music they make and listen to now will be part of their memories to come.

Music Children Can Play

If you honestly face your children's musical abilities and limitations, shop imaginatively for music, and allow the children a free hand at modifying your dream, they'll have a wonderful time making their own music. Often your hard-working young music student grows so concerned with his lessons that he loses sight of their purpose—the pleasure of creating music. When a child suddenly discovers what fun it is to play with other children, he experiences one of the great joys of being alive. Making music for others to enjoy hearing is more exciting still.

A few hours of ensemble rehearsal can transform several children into a "combo" to entertain at your adult party, at the family open house, or at their own Christmas parties. Should the youngsters become inspired with more musical zeal, they can provide entertainment more widely afield.

The most exquisite pleasure of ensemble playing is the performers' joy in their own music-making and the musical unity of playing together. You may be surprised as you listen to the young people rehearsing—they seem to be having so much fun. The music may not sound that well-played to you. But long before the group is ready to perform for an audience—even so acquiescent a one as parents—the joy of making music together will have blossomed. Such shared creativity is as gratifying to mediocre amateurs as to the most professional artists.

The simplest plan is to use the carols everywhere available, assigning parts to the instruments at hand. Small children can play the air, older ones the parts, and the smallest of all provide percussion effects on triangles, bells, tambourines, and drums. Arrangements are easily adapted to existing talent, so that everyone may participate.

Older children with more skill will enjoy an arrangement of "Good King Wenceslas" by Walter Bergman.

His flexible instrumentation has parts for three recorders, two violins, a viola, cello, triangle, tambourine, drum, and voice. Instruments may be added or omitted. See the list at the end of this article for more information about sheet music.

J. S. Bach's "Christmas Concerto," for recorders, strings, piano, and oboes, adapts well to various instrumental combinations, as does Leroy Anderson's nine-part "A Christmas Festival."

There is a considerable amount of ensemble recorder music appropriate for Christmas. This music easily permits violin and voice substitution for the recorder parts. Of course, the flute can substitute for one of the recorders, too. A roundabout adaptation can be made of Benjamin Britten's "A Ceremony of Carols," in which recorders, violins, or flutes can substitute for voices. Piano accompaniment is also called for.

Music By Way of Records

Recorded music has pleasures quite different from homemade music. The not-so-obvious ones include background filler for children's parties and entertainment "specials." As background to a party, a stack of carefully chosen records establishes and maintains moods, covers shyness, and controls excitement. A very special record, calling for full attention, can be an important party extra. In fact, records may be your success secret when entertaining children.

Planning a Party With Records

It is helpful to think of your children's party-with-music as having three stages: first, arrival; second, the activity which occasioned the party; and third, the end of refreshments and time to go home. We have arranged records in three lists to punctuate the party's progress. Of course, there will be overlapping. You could, for example, use just the first list for the entire party. Or if your party is an open house where there is no end, the third list has no place, for these records require real listening.

Good music, such as is listed here, does not always have to be listened to with the entire attention, which is one of the luxuries of recorded music. You may pay attention the next time you listen to it. A youngster may need a rest from party excitement and listen closely to one song. The rest of the time he may hear only snatches, the music (Please turn to page 202)

Send them home with a Rare Trifle

■ One of the most charming and memorable gestures for the open-handed and the open-hearted at Christmas is a gift for every guest of the house. There is a lingering, childlike emotion in most people that cherishes a present, and to be given a gift at parting makes any kind of visit exciting and personal.

Only the true giver should embark on this enterprise, as a certain amount of trouble is necessarily involved. But for those who delight to make gifts, the surprise and pleasure of recipients is very rewarding. The amount of trouble involved will depend on how many people your house attracts at Christmas. Trifles should be prettily wrapped and tied, unless they are so spectacular in appearance they require no wrapping. (It is always more fun to tear open a package.)

Needless to say, trifles should be inexpensive, not only to make such a gesture economically feasible, but also because you do not wish to engender a feeling of obligation in the recipients. Trifles should be small and easy to carry; anything unwieldy is an imposition. It is simpler if the trifles are all alike (or all of a category) for guests will be more comfortable if they all receive the same tokens. It is better to choose items you can buy by the dozen.

The stack of trifles should be part of the Christmas decoration of the house. You might hang certain types of items on a second Christmas tree or arrange a Victorian Christmas Present Table, with a bright felt cover, edged in ball fringe or swagged with tinsel and plastic "glass" balls. Or you can pile unbreakable trifles into a big wicker basket placed near the front door. A decorated laundry basket would do.

A trifle can be almost anything, but the more original they are, the rarer they will be and the more pleased your guests will be. It is usually wise to have one item for adults and one for children, unless your trifle is edible.

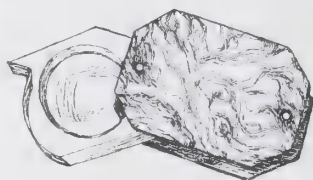

Following are suggestions for sure-to-be-liked trifles:

To Make

Folder files. For letters or canceled checks. Expandable letter files from the stationery store can be covered with fabric, glued on with fabric glue—silk or damask for ladies; tweed, wool plaid for men. These files can also be decorated with old prints, old maps, découpage, or montages of phony paper money.

Work gloves. Ordinary 50-cent white cotton gloves can be decorated with yarn embroidery, appliques, or paint.

Paper shopping bags. Buy stout paper in white or plain colors and decorate with découpage, water colors, "Magic Markers," pen-and-ink, or artificial flowers, or Christmas motifs. Or have your personal greeting and signature printed on the bags by your local printer.

To Assemble

Pencil holder and pencils. Use pottery, glass, china, or lacquer tumblers; fill with bright-colored pencils.

Tea chests and tea: Pack tin, cinnabar, lacquer, or any small, nice box with samplers of exotic teas—Keemums, Oolong, Darjeelings, and Jasmines, one serving of each in small, sealed wax envelopes.

Basket booty. Put a garlic press and a bunch of home-grown shallots in a small wicker basket. Baskets can be packed with a variety of things—foreign mustards, various types of honey, or trowel and package of garden seeds, etc.

Twine box and twine. A cylindrical container with a hole in the top and a ball of twine is a useful gift.

Wrappings. Collect rolls of brilliant tissue paper, silk cord, satin and paper ribbon or give three or four sheets of really fine paper—Venetian, French end papers, Japanese paper, with velvet and brocaded ribbons to match.

Folding Chairs aren't what they used to be

By JULIE POLSHEK

■ If you think of a folding chair as some kind of make-do eyesore, you should review the current market of this useful, and often necessary, party accessory. New models in folding and stacking chairs are not only steady, sturdy, and comfortable: they are well designed, attractive, and often quite chic. They range from the well-remembered little gilt ballroom chair to permanent-looking chairs that are matched to regular stationary chairs. They are equipped with foolproof mechanisms for folding and can be stored in small areas. Some stacking chairs can be stacked twelve deep without fear of their falling.

The nine chairs seen here and on page 193 range in price from $9.95 to $45, depending on size, quality, styling, and elaboration of detail. We give dimensions (height, width, and depth) needed to store four of each chair.

An identical nonfolding chair is available for everyday use. Storage space for four: 38" by 28" by 17". $45 each. By Norquist Products Inc., Jamestown, New York.

Parties In Town

Harry Bell, a man who makes a profession of designing such successful king-size parties that they create country-wide headlines, tells you how you can adapt the same principles to your own party-giving, large or small

● We first spoke with Harry Bell by phone in his New York office between a UN banquet in Wilmington and a wedding on Fisher's Island. He said he could give us more talking time later in the week, after he'd cleared the sketches he'd been making for a debutante ball in Minneapolis—that is, if he got back early enough from the birthday party he was putting on in Baltimore.

This is a typical schedule of a designer whose business it is to turn country clubs into ice palaces, hotel ballrooms into circus tents, and town houses into reasonable facsimiles of oriental gardens—all for clients who want their entertainments to be the kind their guests will remember with stars in their eyes.

That, after all, is the goal of everyone who ever hosts a party. And since Mr. Bell is an acknowledged master of this kind of wizardry, we asked him to divulge some of his professional party-decorating know-how for the benefit of all us do-it-yourself decorators as we head into the entertaining season of the year. His words of wisdom are summed up on these three pages. They're illustrated here in terms of Christmas fiestas, but he asks you to remember that basic principles are the same whether you're laying on a fête champêtre or a Halloween party.

Know your limitations

The cardinal rule of successful party-giving, and the only moralizing Mr. Bell permitted himself, is to be realistic about it. Don't overestimate your capacity to entertain. Be realistic about the number of guests you can comfortably accommodate and serve. Most people invite too many. Be realistic about being able to serve food as it should be served, whether the menu is to be hot or cold. Don't plan an elaborate "do" unless you have both time to prepare for it and time to give the party itself. A pre-theater dinner, for instance, can be a stop-watch dash unless it's carefully planned. As for decorations, don't get carried away with a fanciful scheme that calls for more expensive ingredients than you can afford to use lavishly. You'll only end up with a poverty-stricken effect. Better use inexpensive materials with a free hand than expensive stuff skimpily.

Make one big splash

When you're decorating for a large party, make one room the party center. Concentrate one big, lush decorative splash here, letting the rest of the rooms borrow the same feeling on a less elaborate scale. This is also an effective way to handle the business of Christmas decorating.

Crowded, stand-up parties

At a big, stand-up affair, like a dance or cocktail party, put your decorating efforts on the ceiling and upper areas of the room, because in a crowded room lower walls are scarcely noticed. Avoid little-bitty ornaments. Rather, go all out with bold, massed, eye-catching compositions on window valances, doorways, and chimney breasts. Psychologically, any device that lowers a ceiling visually seems to put a crowd in a gala mood. A tentlike effect is

continued

sure-fire. You can accomplish this by draping streamers from a center chandelier to the corners of the room. Or use Party Poles, those endlessly useful tension-spring gadgets that can extend from floor to ceiling and support decorations. Other Bell tricks for bringing down the roof: Dangle a dense mass of honeycomb paper balls from cords stretched across a room, molding to molding. Make a network of tinsel, crisscrossing it wall to wall. (Such lightweight materials can be taped to moldings—see story, page 114.)

Sit-down parties

Sit-down parties involve tables and food, and since seated guests usually focus on what's directly in front of them, on the backs of chairs and on lower walls, here's where you should focus your decorative efforts. The Bell technique is to stop all eyes with the centerpiece and to use bright, conversation-provoking, long-skirted tablecloths and uniform slip covers for chair backs. (Run up two seams in a piece of fabric and a chair-top is made.)

Centerpiece secret

At a sit-down party meal, you can, in fact, decorate a whole room with centerpieces alone, if you make them spectacular, very high, arranged in tiers, and slender at the base so they don't obstruct vision. Party Poles between table and ceiling can be duked up this way. And don't underestimate the power of candlelight; candles on a table throw the rest of the room into shadow, so it may need no other decoration at all.

Practicalities

You'll be happier about the state of your walls and ceilings if you plan large-scale decorations so that lighting fixtures and moldings can be their main supports. If you do have to drive a nail, the master suggests you leave it there for good, so you'll be equipped the next time you decorate.

What to do with your regular furnishings at party time? Call up a moving company that's willing to move them out and house them in a van overnight. It's worth it.

Party-giving wardrobe

If you entertain a lot, life is easier if you acquire a wardrobe of party equipment and decorating helps like these: a collection of lighthearted table cloths and chair jackets, extra chairs (see our article on page 164); several sets of Party Poles; bolts of ribbons of different colors and widths; tissue paper in many colors, foil papers and foil; spools of wire in varying weights; masking tape, both single- and double-face; transparent tape (for joining cloth and paper inconspicuously and quickly); a hand stapler; a staple gun.

For a dance, clear the floor and put your eye-catching efforts towards the ceiling, where dancers can't miss seeing it. Party Poles, wound in Christmas greens and braceleted with glitter balls, can support festoons of roping which is studded, Della Robbia style, with tissue-paper roses. If your room is carpeted, hire a portable dance floor.

Ribbon is high on Mr. Bell's list of easy-to-work-with party trimmings. Ribbon streamers turn a high-ceilinged living room into a festive tent-like pavilion and, stretched flat on the wall in plaid pattern, creates an unexpected trellis-work of satin to delight the guests' eyes. Ribbons are taped to chandelier, moldings, and baseboards.

DINNER IN THE GREAT TRADITION

Filets de Sole, Belle Maison

(Poached Filets of Sole on Diced Mushrooms, White Wine Sauce)

16 small filets of sole
2 tablespoons butter
3 tablespoons minced shallots or scallions
1½ cups fish stock or ¾ cup clam juice
1 cup dry white wine, or ¾ cup dry white vermouth
8 mushroom caps about 1¼" in diameter

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Lightly salt and pepper the sole filets and fold in half, end to end. Smear half the butter in a fireproof dish, sprinkle with half the shallots or scallions, and arrange the filets in one slightly overlapping layer. Sprinkle over them the remaining shallots or scallions and distribute the rest of the butter on top. Pour in the fish stock or clam juice, the wine or vermouth, and enough water almost to cover the fish. Bring just to a simmer on top of the stove. Cover with waxed paper and set in lower third of preheated oven for 6 to 8 minutes. Fish is done when a fork pierces the flesh easily. Do not overcook.

Drain cooking liquid into a stainless-steel saucepan and rapidly boil down until liquid has reduced to about ¾ cup. Set fish aside, covered with waxed paper. Refrigerate it when it is cold.

Flute the mushrooms cups, if you wish. Toss them in the saucepan with the fish-cooking liquid, bring to the simmer, cover, and simmer 6 minutes. Add the mushrooms to the fish. Reserve the liquid for the following sauce.

White Wine Sauce

3 tablespoons butter
4 tablespoons flour
Hot fish-cooking liquid
1 cup heavy cream
2 egg yolks
Salt, white pepper
Lemon juice

Slowly cook the butter and flour together in a heavy-bottom stainless-steel or enameled saucepan for 2 minutes. Remove from heat and let cool for a moment, then vigorously blend in with a wire whip the fish liquid and milk. Beat in half the cream. Boil, stirring, for 1 minute. Remove from heat. Blend the egg yolks in a 2-quart mixing bowl with half the remaining cream, then beat in half the hot sauce by small dribblets. Beat this in turn, by dribblets, back into the sauce. Boil for 1 minute, stirring with a wooden spoon to reach the entire bottom and sides of the pan. Sauce should coat spoon nicely. If too thick, thin out with spoonful of cream. Season carefully with salt, pepper, and drops of lemon juice. Clean sauce off sides of pan, and dot top of sauce with bits of softened butter to prevent a skin from forming. When cold, cover and refrigerate.

1½ pounds diced, fresh mushrooms
2 tablespoons minced shallots or scallions
2 tablespoons butter
1 teaspoon cooking oil
Salt and pepper

Sauté the mushrooms and shallots or scallions in hot butter and oil in an enameled or stainless-steel fry pan for 6 to 8 minutes, or until the pieces began to separate from each other. Stir in salt and pepper to taste. When cool, cover and refrigerate.

Final assembly takes less than 10 minutes and requires:

4 ounces softened butter
2-inch puff-pastry crescents, or toast triangles (white bread sautéed in butter)
1 diced truffle, or parsley sprigs

Cover the fish and mushrooms. Heat briefly on top of the stove, then set over a kettle of simmering water. Stir the sauce over moderate heat until it comes to a simmer, and reheat the diced, sautéed mushrooms. Stir ½ cup of sauce into the mushrooms and heap to a slight dome on the platter. Arrange the poached fish over the mushrooms. Remove sauce from heat and beat in the butter, a tablespoon at a time. Spoon the sauce over the fish and mushrooms. Decorate with mushroom caps, pastry crescents, or toast triangles, and diced truffle or parsley sprigs. Serve immediately, accompanied by the steamed rice.

Steamed Rice

(To serve eight)

Dribble 2 cups of dry, unwashed, raw, long-grained white rice into 6 quarts of rapidly boiling salted water. Boil uncovered for 8 to 10 minutes, until a grain is barely tender when bitten. Drain in a colander, fluff under hot water tap for 1 minute. Turn rice into a double layer of washed cheesecloth. Place bundle in colander, cover, and steam over boiling water for 10 to 15 minutes, until rice has swelled and fluffed. Uncover. To reheat, cover and steam several minutes over boiling water until rice is heated through.

HOUSE NUMBER THREE (Main Course)

Pièce de Boeuf Braisée
Glazed Carrots and Onions
Hot French Bread
Braised Celery
Salad of Endives, Julienne of Beets, and Water Cress
Oil and Lemon Dressing
Red Burgundy (2 bottles)

The meat course will follow a good two hours, at least, after the party has begun. You must, therefore, have something that can wait happily and fully cooked. You want, too, a change from the continual ham and turkey syndrome of the season. Braised beef is a perfect answer. The meat is cooked, ready for serving, and stays warm in its sauce. For this, an electric hot tray would be handy, or a warming oven. With neither of these at your disposal, you can do nicely with a large kettle of barely simmering water over which you can set your beef. The vegetable garniture is ready, needing only a brief heating-through before you arrange it around the platter. The bread is heated in a 400-degree oven at the last minute, then cut into thick slices. The salad greens, wrapped in damp towels, and the julienne of beets in a bowl, are in the refrigerator. The dressing is made, and the assembly will take but a moment: the endive in a ring around the edge, a wreath of water cress, the beets in the middle with a sprinkling of parsley, then the dressing over all. And just before you leave the house, uncork the wine, then replace the corks lightly in the bottles.

Pièce de Boeuf Braisée

(Top Round of Beef Braised in Red Wine)

A 4-pound top round of beef, trimmed of fat and gristle
Cooking oil
1 pound cracked beef and/or veal bones
3 each, medium-size, roughly-sliced carrots and onions

If possible, have the beef larded with 4 or more strips of pork fat-back,  $\frac{1}{4}$  inch across, inserted through the length of the meat. Have the beef tied with loops of string around it at  $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch intervals so that it will keep its shape while cooking. Baste the beef with cooking oil, place it in a broiling pan with the bones and vegetables, and set under a moderately hot broiler, turning and basting with oil frequently until beef, bones, and vegetables are nicely browned. This will take about 15 minutes.

Now you will need:

- A covered roaster just large enough to hold the beef and other ingredients
- 8 bunches tender, stringless celery, slowly boiled in salted water 15 minutes, drained, and each bunch tied in shape with string
- 3 cloves unpeeled garlic, halved
- 1 tablespoon thyme
- 2 bay leaves
- 4 allspice berries
- 6 peppercorns
- 4 chopped tomatoes
- A 5-inch square of fresh or salt pork rind, simmered 10 minutes in 1 quart of water
- 4 cups California Mountain Red wine
- 3 or more cups brown beef stock or bouillon
- Salt
- A  $\frac{1}{4}$ -inch thickness of beef suet or fresh pork fat large enough to cover length and upper sides of the beef
- 6 parsley sprigs

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Place the browned beef, bones, and vegetables in the roaster. Pour the fat out of the broiler pan. Add half a cup of water and scrape up the coagulated browning juices with a wooden spoon; pour into the roaster. Add the celery, garlic, herbs, spices, tomatoes, and blanched pork rind. Pour in the wine, and enough beef stock or bouillon to come two-thirds up the sides of the beef. Salt the beef lightly and cover with the suet or pork fat. Bring to a simmer on top of the stove. Taste braising liquid, and salt it lightly. Place cover on roaster and set in preheated oven. Regulate heat so liquid simmers slowly for 3 to 4 hours, turning and basting the beef once or twice. The meat is done when a fork pierces it fairly easily.

Remove the beef. Strain the braising liquid into a saucepan, pressing juices out of vegetables. Skim off the fat, and boil down liquid until you have about 3 cups that resemble a lightly thickened sauce. Thicken, if necessary, by blending 1 tablespoon of corn-starch with 1 tablespoon of water, beating this into the sauce, then simmering for 2 minutes. Carefully correct seasoning with salt and pepper.

Return the beef to the roaster, pour the sauce over it, and cover loosely with aluminum foil. (If done a day ahead, set cover on roaster when meat is cold, and refrigerate. Remove from refrigerator 2 hours before proceeding.)

a simmer on top of the stove, cover, and place on an electric warming tray over medium heat, or in a 150-degree oven, or over a large kettle of barely simmering water.

To serve: Set the beef on a large, hot platter. Cut and discard trussing strings. If sauce has reduced and thickened too much, simmer with a bit of bouillon or water to bring it back to its original consistency. Reheat your glazed carrots and onions. Halve each stalk of braised celery and reheat with a spoonful or two of the sauce. Arrange vegetables around the meat. Spoon a bit of sauce over the meat, and pour the rest into a warmed gravy boat. Decorate the vegetables with minced parsley, and serve.

HOUSE NUMBER FOUR (Dessert and Coffee)

Charlotte des Isles, Flambée
Crème Chantilly
Coffee
Liqueurs    Champagne demi-sec

Dessert is a flaming finish to the evening: fruit custard that will remind you of a light plum pudding, headily flavored with rum. As the dessert is cool, not warm, the trick in flaming it is to heat the outside, the serving dish, and the rum. The serving dish, particularly, must be very hot for the rum to take fire. You may whip the accompanying cream while heating the dessert. If you use chilled, heavy cream, a chilled bowl, and a large, chilled, wire whip it will mount in less than 2 minutes. Or you may whip the cream before you leave the house, refrigerate it, and beat it again briefly before serving. Sweeten it just before serving, by sifting 2 or 3 tablespoons of powdered sugar over it, and folding it with your wire whip. The cream should be soft and light, not stiff. Note that the champagne is demi-sec, or semi-sweet. Dry champagne, however chic, does not go at all with sweet desserts.

Charlotte des Isles, Flambée (Rum, Caramel, and Fruit Mold, Flambée)

$\frac{2}{3}$  cup (4 ounces) large, seedless raisins
 $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups (12 ounces) mixed, diced, glacéed fruits (these come in jars at your market)
 $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups dark rum

Drop the raisins into boiling water for 5 minutes. Drain and place in a mixing bowl. Drop the glacéed fruits into boiling water, bring to a boil, drain immediately, and add to the raisins. Pour in the rum and set aside.

For the next step:

$\frac{1}{2}$  cup granulated sugar
2 tablespoons water

A 6-cup fireproof, cylindrical baking dish, preferably a "charlotte"  $3\frac{1}{2}$  inches deep Cook the sugar and water in a small, heavy saucepan over moderately high heat, swirling and shaking the pan until the sugar dissolves, then swirling the pan occasionally while the sugar boils and gradually turns a caramel-brown. At once pour the caramel into the mold and turn mold in all directions to film bottom and sides with caramel. When caramel has ceased to run, turn mold upside down over a plate.

For the custard:

 $\frac{2}{3}$  cup granulated sugar
3 eggs

1 tablespoon vanilla extract, or a vanilla bean steeped for 10 minutes in the hot milk

A stale sponge cake 7 to 8 inches in diameter and 1 inch thick

Heat milk in the caramel-cooking pan to dissolve left-over caramel. Beat the sugar into the eggs with a wire whip in a 2-quart mixing bowl. When well blended, continue beating while pouring on the milk in a thin stream of droplets. Beat in the vanilla extract.

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Cut the cake into horizontal layers to fit exactly into the caramelized mold. Fit a layer of cake into the bottom of the mold. Drain the fruits. Sprinkle 3 tablespoons of the drained rum over the cake layer in the mold, and arrange over it a third of the fruits. Pour over them a third of custard mixture from the preceding paragraph. Place a second layer of cake in the mold, sprinkle with rum, cover with half the remaining fruits, and half the remaining custard. Proceed in the same fashion for the last layer. Place any left-over cake on top and sprinkle with rum, but leave a  $\frac{1}{4}$ -inch space unfilled, for swelling. Pour remaining (a cup or more) rum into a covered jar and reserve for flambéeing. (Dessert may be prepared ahead to this point, and baked later; baking time, about 1 hour.)

About an hour before you are to leave the house, place the dessert mold in a pan of boiling water and set in the middle level of a preheated, 350-degree oven. Regulate heat during baking, so water in pan never quite simmers. Dessert is done when a needle or knife, plunged into the center, comes out clean. Remove from oven and set aside, leaving mold uncovered.

To serve: Set dessert mold over moderate heat for a moment, to loosen on bottom. Remove from heat. Turn a fireproof serving dish upside down over mold and reverse the two to unmold the dessert. Sprinkle dessert with 2 tablespoons of granulated sugar and place in a pre-heated 425-degree oven for about 5 minutes, until sugar coating and platter are very hot. Meanwhile, heat the rum in a small saucepan. Just before serving, pour the hot rum around the dessert, bring to the dining room, and ignite with a lighted match. Serve with 2 cups Crème Chantilly (lightly whipped cream sweetened with powdered sugar). (Editor's Note: See our article on flambéed foods, "That Lovely Leaping Flame," page 154.)

COME TO A CANDY CANE MIXER

quite a group of Christmas plates. The Santa Claus salts and peppers are amusing and, of course, the Santa Claus cups on the table may be filled with hot cocoa with a marshmallow floating on top.

Don't forget all the trimmings they love to put on their hot dogs, such as catsup, relish, pickles, mustard, etc. Put these right on the table so they can help themselves. All you have to do is slice the Christmas log. The kids gather up rolls and help themselves to the bologna, using as much fancying as they want.

When you go to your grocer or meat market, ask for the bologna that is four inches in diameter. Allow a quarter of a pound per person—that is, when you are having boys and girls. If you are having just boys—with huskier appetites—they can really eat you out of house and home, so you will have to order more. Gauge the boys' appetites by your own sons' capacity. It's fun to have an all-boy party because they are less awkward by themselves. They play pool or use whatever other game equipment you have; any group of boys can make their own entertainment.

Take the casing off the bologna with care. Study our picture (page 152) and note how we carved it into a log. Take a good sharp knife, fairly short-bladed, and grip it firmly, putting your index finger on the dull side of the blade. Score the log at a 45-degree angle. If you wish to draw a wood knot on the bologna, you draw the knot in first or carve it in. Then run down the bologna with waving lines.

Preheat the oven to 300 degrees F. Put the log in the oven in a shallow baking pan lined with foil, and allow ten to fifteen minutes per pound, according to size—the larger the bologna, the shorter time it takes. Baste it every now and then with melted butter. During the last ten minutes of the cooking period, put the log under the broiler, in order to brown it. You must watch the bologna very carefully during the browning, because it must be turned in order to brown evenly. It may stick to the bottom of the pan, so have ready a wide, flat spatula to loosen it and gently turn it. After all, you don't want to break your proud beauty. As you brown it, the scored part will curl back to resemble bark.

Have a green salad with lots of tomatoes to give that red note. You will note in the picture that I have used "red lettuce." I like to keep red uppermost in mind. Peel the tomatoes and chop them, or if you can get the small cherry tomatoes, cut these in half and mix them through the salad. They add a lot to the decoration of the log. Plenty of chopped parsley and chives add to the decoration of your salad. For salad dressing, here is my recipe.

Salad Dressing

- 1 tiny clove of garlic (optional)
- 1 small shallot or 1 green onion
- 1 rounded teaspoon sugar
- ¼ teaspoon mustard
- ½ teaspoon paprika
- 1 teaspoon M.S.G.
- ½ teaspoon salt
- ½ teaspoon Beau Monde seasoning
- ½ cup red wine vinegar (I like Widow's Mite)
- 1½ cups olive oil

Squeeze garlic and onion or shallot through the garlic press. Into your mortar put sugar, mash with pestle, add other dry seasonings, and mix well. Add vinegar and pour into Pyrex pitcher for ease of mixing and measuring. Add oil slowly, stirring vigorously. Store in bottle until ready to use.

When you are ready to serve your beautiful pièce de résistance, surround the Christmas log with green—either holly or pine boughs, or bits and pieces of pine—and the cherry tomatoes.

THE PIANO, JULIE, LASTS A LONG TIME

Vertical or horizontal? In addition to the tonal superiority of its longer strings, the grand piano offers a couple of mechanical advantages. Its hammers travel straight up from below the strings and fall back to rest by the gravity effect of their own weight—aided, of course, by the rebound force from the string; whereas on an upright piano—as we used to call it—the hammers strike forward at vertically mounted strings, and the return to rest must be aided mechanically. Also, the grand mechanism has a slightly better leverage ratio than the upright. Together with the simpler action, it makes this type of instrument more responsive to certain demands of rapid playing. To players of average ability, though, these advantages are rarely needed. If your household is going to enjoy the presence of an extremely talented daughter-pianist, she will not be handicapped in any way by her vertical piano until she graduates from high school.

SO MUCH for the theory of it. Now what models of piano do you find when you go shopping?

The big upright you knew as a child has become a casualty of the times. This had to happen. It was just too big for the shrinking American home.

Now we have the "vertical," just as we have bowling "lanes" instead of bowling alleys and billiard "parlors" instead of pool rooms. The vertical is usually the same width (about five feet) and the same depth as the old upright, but it is not nearly so tall. This has been accomplished by a single ingenious change in the mechanical action. One element in the elaborate lever system between key and hammer used to point straight up; now it points straight down, and the subsequent elements in the lever system can accordingly be arranged at a lower level. This has not changed in any respect the playing qualities or the responsiveness of the old upright, and it has made the piano into a piece of furniture which is compatible with modern living.

As you shop for your piano, you are likely to find about five basic models of the household piano to choose. There will be a "baby grand" about five feet long, and an "intermediate grand" from five and a half to about six feet. There will be a minimum vertical, hardly more than three feet high; you can identify this piano because its music rack is on top—not against its front. There will also be a slightly larger vertical with music rack on front, and probably a "studio" vertical.

The smaller vertical is popularly called a "spinnet," a rather confusing name which is also shared with today's small electronic organs. (A spinnet is actually a small harpsichord.) The next size, about 40 inches high, is known as a "console." You may also find the larger vertical piano that's called a studio upright. This instrument is essentially a working piano, one that invites use for five or six hours a day. String length is as great as can be ingeniously contained in an upright case.

While mechanical actions are highly standardized and are often bought from subcontractor specialists who build nothing but piano actions, all other aspects of piano design vary considerably from make to make just as they do from model to model. The difference begins at the very start—on the drawing board. Here is decided the configuration of the harp-shape frame of iron and wood on which the strings are stretched. Exactly what shape will permit the longest bass strings in the pre-established size of case? What compromises will best determine the lengths of the shorter and shorter strings up through the instrument's scale?

String weights are then figured on the basis of these established string lengths—the heaviest at the bottom, growing ever lighter up through the scale. In a good-feeling and good-sounding piano, it is desirable that all strings pull at approximately the same tension. (On a household piano, the combined pull of all the strings is close to 35,000 pounds, eloquent reason why the framing must be very rigid and very heavy. There really isn't a good but a lightweight piano.)

THE soundboard of a piano is a sensitive vibrating amplifier that is just as important to tone and power as is the belly of the violin or head of a banjo; the tone is transmitted from strings to the soundboard through carefully designed and located bridges. Without these elements properly proportioned and placed, you would hardly hear the tone of the strings at all.

All this is design, and it is accomplished by taste and judgment rather than by rule. Now the piano must be built, and here again there can be a difference between the spinet of one brand and that of another, a difference that may justify a difference in price up to a hundred percent. Quality control standards may vary. To a lesser extent, quality of materials may vary. To a considerable extent, quality of cabinetry may vary. To a great extent, assembly practices may vary—for instance, the tunings a piano gets in its factory shakedown.

Now are you ready to start piano shopping? Not quite. First you should know a little something about tuning a piano.

How often should a piano be tuned? The piano you hear played live or through your hi-fi system by Fleisher, Rubinstein, or Erroll Garner was tuned just before the performance you're "attending." No piano, not even the finest, will stay perfectly in tune for twenty-four hours unless it is kept—unplayed—under laboratory conditions of controlled humidity and temperature.

New standards of high-fidelity sound have raised the standards of in-tuneness which the household piano must meet. Concert-going of the past did not provide for such direct comparison. There was always the interval of an hour or so that it took to get home from the concert. The perfectly tuned piano at the concert could not be compared immediately with the once-a-year-tuned piano at home. Now all is changed. The piano and the hi-fi set are usually in the same room, and the family piano will compare a little shabbily unless it gets some of the attention that it has always deserved.

Ask a tuner how often he tunes his own piano. The answer will usually be that he would tune it once a month—if he had the time. Ask him how often yours should be tuned, and he will usually say four times a year: 1—Two weeks after the heat is turned on. 2—Halfway through the heating season. 3—Two weeks after the heat is turned off. 4—Halfway through the summer. This is a very moral answer and a practical one, and with this amount of attention, your piano will be pleasing to listen to and inspiring to play.

The reason for this detour into the province of piano-tuning is a situation you are likely to meet in any dealer's display room. You may have found a piano that you like very much—except that it doesn't sound quite as good as the piano next to it that in all other respects you don't like at all. Always remember that the piano you do like may have been on display—without tuning—for a month or more, and that the other one may have come in the day before and be freshly tuned. Model for model, all new pianos sound remarkably good and confusingly alike when they have just been tuned, but no dealer can afford to give his entire stock in trade to such daily maintenance.

Now you are ready to go shopping for a piano. You have decided on the model and the size and where you will put it when you get it home. If you shop efficiently, you will devote your greatest attention to what you see rather than what you hear. There is the matter of tuning previously mentioned. Also, it is next to impossible to compare the sound of a piano you like with the sound of another piano that you heard and liked yesterday in another part of town. Don't be concerned if the piano you otherwise like very much sounds too brilliant. Your tuner can "mellow" it to your taste on his first visit. If, on the other hand, you like a piano except for its lack of brilliance, buy it with confidence. Age and use will bring up the brilliance, and once attained, your tuner can keep it exactly as you like it.

The first consideration in visual piano selection is of course period design and finish. Don't bother to listen to or otherwise inspect pianos of any design other than what you have decided you want.

When you have found the just-right-looking piano, consider it next as a piece of fine furniture. You may not know pianos, but you do know good cabinetry. The quality workmanship you find, or fail to find, in this critical inspection is likely to reflect a similar quality, or lack of it, in the hidden musical attributes of the instrument.

Only when all of the above criteria have been met to your entire satisfaction should you bother to listen to the piano of your choice. You will want to do so, of course, because everybody does, just as they kick the tires of a used car before buying it. Your selection of piano will sound quite differently when you get it into its home environment, and this difference is always for the better.

Finally there is the matter of price and terms, and here you are on familiar ground and need no assistance from your grandparents. A final word of advice, though. Whatever the other aspects of the deal, be sure that it includes a tuning two weeks after delivery. In that time your piano will have accustomed itself, and the tuning job will be a good and lasting one.

Gramps

all excellent to precede wine. Have salted nuts, certainly, and perhaps little slices of prosciutto or ham, and some Italian salami sliced paper-thin—just a bit of each to have as a nibbler or a change of taste and pace. I like sharp Cheddar cheese and imported Swiss cheese. Have your cheese man cut off a thick slice, or buy it in a brick. Then refrigerate it so that you can cut it into cheese sticks. Another item that everybody loves—a sort of conversation piece—is miniature corn on the cob. It is a product of West Germany, and the packer is Bundelsheim. I rinse the cobs off before serving, in order to get out the slight vinegary taste; for the same reason, I would not serve a tossed green salad that called for French dressing. The menu my guests loved was, besides the hamburger tree, whole baby string beans, crusty French bread, and a chocolate mousse for dessert. With such a menu you can continue with the wine up to and perhaps into the dessert course.

Now for your pièce de résistance. You will need a "Buckeye Broiler" (a round pizza pan with handles on the bottom and a liner with holes in it) and a funnel. I bought a funnel that is eight inches in diameter at the base and a little more than eight inches tall. If your oven will not take this size, you may use a smaller funnel. I place the funnel in the top of my Buckeye Broiler and then I build my hamburger Christmas tree on it.

Christmas Tree Hamburger

Serves 12

- 6 pounds ground beef (6 percent fat)
- 8 slices bread with crusts removed
- 1½ cups boiling water
- 1 rounded tablespoon Instant Onion (Spice Islands)
- 1 rounded tablespoon M.S.G. (Spice Islands)
- 1 rounded tablespoon Chef Howald's Seasoning Salt
- ½ teaspoon Java Cracked Pepper (Spice Islands)
- 1 cup parsley, freshly chopped
- ½ cup chives, freshly chopped
- ¼ pound melted butter

Put the beef and the bread (crusts removed) into a large mixing bowl and pour over them the boiling water; use a fork to mix all to a paste. Add your seasonings slowly by sprinkling them all over the surface, tossing this hamburger brew lightly with the fork. Add more seasonings by sprinkling over the top. (I combine my seasonings and sprinkle them over several times.) After the beef and the seasonings are well mixed, add the parsley and chives, lightly tossing all with a fork, then dribble in the melted butter, stirring well.

Now start building your Christmas tree. Put the funnel on the holed part of your Buckeye Broiler and lightly mound the hamburger around it. Put more at the bottom, so that your hamburger has a base to stand on; then lightly fork it up around the funnel. In doing this, don't pat it down flat; pile it on lightly, leaving the exterior as rough as possible. It's best to arrange it with your fingers. The rougher-looking on the outside, the better the tree will be. Pile it clear to the top. There will be shrinkage from the top, so allow for that. Have very fresh parsley sprigs to stick into the top of your funnel, for when your tree is done, you do not move it off of the funnel but serve it just as it is.

I was asked why I did not make the tree just one big mound of hamburger; this is because the inside would not be done by the time the outside was cooked. With the funnel in the center, heat reaches the inside of the mound; the result is rare—but cooked—hamburger. (I got the idea from the angel-food-cake pan.)

Put the tree in a hot oven, preheated to 400 degrees; then turn the heat down to 300° and cook for half an hour. This way you will get well-done meat on the outside and rare meat on the inside.

The mushrooms may be prepared in the morning, or you may use canned mushrooms sautéed in butter. I prefer the fresh ones; I fix them in the morning and just re-heat them to decorate the tree. I slice the stems off even with the cap and put two tablespoons of butter and two tablespoons of olive oil in the fry pan and sauté them, stem side down, for three or four minutes. Then I turn them over and season them with Chef Howald's Seasoning Salt and allow them to cook for another five minutes. They must be tender but not soft, so that they will hold firmly to the tree.

I pin the mushrooms to the tree with pretzel sticks. Don't use toothpicks, because somebody might not find them all. Moreover, pretzel sticks add to the crunchiness of your food. Surround the whole base of the tree with noodles, and then sprinkle parsley over all—it is a delectable dish!

If you want something spectacular, flame your tree. That is easily done and certainly is a tremendously glamorous addition. Have the room fairly dark to exploit the flame. I not only pour warm brandy over the tree but I also have four eggshell halves filled with hot brandy embedded in the noodles. Light these, then bring the tree triumphantly to the table. (Brandy must be warm and egg shells dry to make it flame.)

For the spaghetti, I find Mrs. Asien's Home-Style egg noodles delicious. They are made by the Asien Noodle Company, Wheeling, Illinois. They make them in two sizes, a very tiny one and a wide noodle. They are so good that four people will often consume a package of them. There are eight ounces in a package, giving two ounces per person, the correct amount of dried spaghetti products. Cook the noodles according to directions and put them on your hot platter around the hamburger tree; then sprinkle minced parsley over the whole.

If you wish to make a very glamorous dish, you may use this recipe, which is especially appropriate for Sunday-night suppers with any cold meat that you may have.

Spaghetti Alfredo

(Stanton Version)

Serves 12

24 ounces Mrs. Asien's Home-Style noodles
1½ cubes butter
½ cup chopped parsley
¼ cup finely minced scallions
6 egg yolks
¾ to 1 cup canned milk
1 teaspoon Black Java cracked pepper
1 cup grated Parmesan cheese

Cook the noodles according to directions. While they are cooking, slowly melt butter in a large fry pan, add the parsley and minced scallions, and let this simmer over very low heat (do not let butter brown). While this is being done, beat the egg yolks, canned milk, and pepper. For easy mixing, place mixture in your blender and let it whiz for a few seconds. When the noodles are cooked, drain them and place them in the frying pan with the butter, scallions, and parsley; mix thoroughly, using a fork and a spoon. Then add the blended milk, eggs, and pepper. Continue to mix, adding the grated Parmesan cheese gradually until all the noodles are enveloped with the cheese, butter, eggs, onion, and parsley. Do this quickly in order to keep it hot, having low heat under the frying pan all the while.

For dessert, this chocolate mousse (for 12) is one of the easiest desserts in the world to make; and there is no real cooking involved, so that you can't go wrong.

½ pound package semisweet Ghiradelli Eagle Sweet Chocolate
2 squares Baker's Unsweetened Chocolate
12 egg whites (refrigerate yolks in tight-covered container)
12 tablespoons of sieved powdered sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla
3 to 5 tablespoons brandy

Melt the two kinds of chocolate very carefully on the lowest heat your stove is capable of. Keep turning it so that it will melt evenly. (If you overcook chocolate, it gets grainy and you have to toss it out or use it some other way.) Beat the egg whites in a bowl until stiff peaks form; add the powdered sugar very slowly, mixing well; then with a rubber spatula dip out the chocolate and stir it into the mixture. Stir vigorously (I use a fork). Get every last vestige of chocolate out of the pan, and then add the vanilla and the brandy. You may put this in one lovely large dish, if you wish, to serve it. I prefer using individual dishes. Refrigerate it until ready to use. This dessert could be done the day before or on the morning of your party, because it takes time to set. (Don't forget to save the egg shells for your Christmas Tree Hamburger.)

A PIZZA PARTY FOR THE COLLEGE CROWD

Cheddar cheese. Bake in a 375° to 400° oven for 30 to 35 minutes.

One canned sauce I keep on hand that may be used at the drop of a hint is Marinara Sauce, Italian Style, put out by Golden Grain Macaroni Company, San Leandro, California.

You can also use this sauce with spaghetti, macaroni, noodles, or whatever. But it's especially good for a pizza with crab, shrimp, or a fish. Then scatter Parmesan and Mozzarella cheese instead of Cheddar over the pizza.

If you have boys who are husky eaters, perhaps you had better make two pizzas.

A fresh green salad goes very well with this pizza. On page 189 I give full details for the dressing that I use for the green salad.

For dessert, I always have on hand lots of Christmas cookies and coffee to complete this festive party meal.

Winter dryness in your home is one of the frequent causes of colds, sinus conditions and bronchial trouble. Now, you can eliminate winter dryness by installing Skuttle's new DRUMATIC humidifier in your furnace. Set the Honeywell humidistat for the desired degree of humidity and relax in a healthier, more comfortable atmosphere.

Besides being dangerous to your family's health, dry air causes static electricity in your home; the joints of furniture dry out and crack, and carpeting and drapes become brittle and wear more rapidly. Your fuel bill is higher because dry air requires a higher temperature setting for comfort. The unique operating principle of the DRUMATIC humidifier affords quiet, trouble-free, positive humidification with the highest output at the lowest operating cost . . . LESS THAN ½c PER DAY! Your furnace dealer will be glad to demonstrate the DRUMATIC humidifier; call or see him today! ## CHRISTMAS MUSIC

Their lively treatment of the gay carols is refreshingly untheatrical, and in the poignant ones they never mistake crooning for singing. Capitol P 8365; SP 8365.

Yuletide Songs from Many Lands. Christmas songs from many lands and many centuries enable the Trapp Family Singers to show their admirable assimilation and mastery of widely contrasting musical and linguistic idioms. Whatever they do invariably comes out effortlessly, with endearing purity and enthusiasm. Franz Wasner conducts. Decca, two records, Vol. I, DL 9553; Vol. II, DL 9689.

The Mormon Tabernacle Choir. In several impressive ceremonial releases, under the expert direction of Richard Condie, this group performs an attractive repertory of diverse origins ranging from the most familiar to the unhackneyed. Three good examples of their art on Columbia label are Christmas Carols Around the World, ML 5684, MS 6284; The Holly and the Ivy, ML 5592, MS 6192; and The Spirit of Christmas, ML 5423, MS 6100.

Master Composers

Considering the thrilling origin of Christmas, it is surprising to find how comparatively few master composers were stimulated to produce large scale works for the holiday. Fewer still were inspired to their greatest heights. Following is a list that is selected from the major masterworks in performances of major importance.

Weihnachts Historie (Christmas Story) by Henrich Schütz. The poetic fervor of this prophetic religious drama "of the joyful and blessed birth of the son of God and Mary" is only matched by its historic significance, for it prepared the stage for Bach's cantatas and Handel's oratorios a century later. As recorded by the Schwäbischer Chorus with splendid soloists, and orchestra conducted by Hans Grischkat, it is exquisite. Vox DL 780; DL 500.780.

If you were to try Bertolli Chianti Classico just once, it's a pretty safe bet you'd buy it again and again and again and again and again and again and

MUNSON G. SHAW CO., INC., NEW YORK 17, N. Y.

Four Christmas Concertos. Four Italian masters of the late 17th Century, Corelli, Locatelli, Manfredini, and Torelli, created the delightful (and in the case of Corelli, the marvelous) music excellently played by The Mainz Chamber Orchestra. All the works chosen are characteristic examples of this period of lyrical and flowing writing. The effect of the total derives largely from the ensemble's ability to project the individuality of each work. The outstanding gem is the Corelli concerto, concluding with the "Pastorale." There is no music that celebrates the moods of the season more happily. Archive, 3147: 73147.

L'Enfance du Christ (The Childhood of Christ). A glowing performance of rare insight and artistry under the direction of Colin Davis reveals Berlioz's three-part oratorio in a totally fresh light as one of the outstanding achievements of his entire creative output. The Goldsbrough Orchestra and St. Anthony Singers and soloists not only capture the spirit of this work irreproachably, but also demonstrate the way in which Berlioz captured the spirit of his romantic era. L'Oiseau-Lyre. Two-record album, 50201/2; 60032/3.

No. 67, Hold in Affection, Jesus Christ, is a Bach cantata that is both appropriate to the season and first-rate Bach. This record is available in a memorable performance featuring the late and great contralto, Kathleen Ferrier with the Bach Cantata Singers. A special dividend of the famous and enchanting chorale, Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring, is on the reverse side. London 5092.

St. Matthew Passion. Nothing is more astounding, more thrilling than the emotional music that Bach set to the passion and suffering of Jesus. Yet without a trace of grief, the affecting score breathes peace and majesty. And the nearer it draws to the end, the more radiant and stately it becomes. The soloists are Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau, Elisabeth Schwarzkopf, Peter Pears, Christa Ludwig, Nicolai Gedda, and Walter Berry. Otto Klemperer conducts the Philharmonia Orchestra and Choir. Angel five-record album, 3599 E/L; S3599 E/L.

CHRISTMAS MUSIC

dazzling Christmas Eve dream to glorious fulfillment. Mercury two-record album, OL2-113; SR2-9013.

New Works

We not only love the old but we also demand the new. In our list, therefore, are four contemporary Christmas works that reflect a deeply felt religious ardor and the power of artistic communication. None of their composers has attempted to displace or replace the great traditional carols whose moods reflect the world of medieval feeling. It is precisely these moods that have been so successfully captured in the following compositions.

A Ceremony of Carols. The haunting charm and innocent ardor of this contemporary British classic by Benjamin Britten is delivered with compelling simplicity and rare beauty of tone by the Texas Boys Choir under the sensitive and precise direction of George Bragg. The second side of this recording features Carols of Many Lands, a fitting complement of beautiful tunes. Decca 10060; 710060.

Christmas Cantata. A Christmas repertory of traditional material was importantly extended by the composer, Arthur Honegger, into a masterpiece of originality. Weaving the threads of Latin psalms, and well known German and French carols into a fascinating pattern, the composer has produced a profoundly moving composition of mystery and drama and rousing joyousness. The performance of the Orchestra de la Suisse Romande and the two Swiss choruses under the direction of Ernest Ansermet is first rate. London 5686; 25320.

The Coming of Christ. The main theme of Robert Russell Bennett's expressive and expertly wrought score is evolved from the inspired Gregorian chant, "O Dulcissime Jesu." The narration written by Richard Hanser, and derived from the words, the rhythms and the poetry of the Bible, is spoken with natural eloquence by Alexander Scourby. The handsome album also features many vivid reproductions of art masterpieces associated with the story of Christ's coming. The orchestral background for this American contribution is excellent. Decca DL 9093; DL 79093.

Amahl and the Night Visitors. Despite its fame and its annual TV exposure, the tender Christmas fantasy by the versatile Italian-American composer-dramatist Gian-Carlo Menotti can hardly be put in the class of over-exploited music. This heartwarming work has become a classic, and the recording by the original television cast as a genuine document. RCA Victor LM-1701.

THE LOVELY LEAPING FLAME

sweet, coffee-flavored liqueur would be substituted for Grand Marnier or Cointreau, or for both.

Taking the opposite view on the subject of flavor is Lucien Lescarmel, who likes to have only one brilliant flavor in a flambéed dish. Says this maître d'hôtel of the Regency Restaurant of New York's Hotel Regency: "Combine several flavors and you muffle the taste of them all."

As important as flavor, says this haute-cuisine-trained Frenchman, is the strength of the liquor. Don't expect wine to flame. It would need the help of brandy of eighty or higher proof to blaze well. Don't try to burn anything under sixty-three proof. All you'll get is a feeble flash. If you first warm liquor up, anything will flicker, even a twenty-proof sherry. But the visual side of the flambée calls for more than that. It is as theatrical as a show; why make a flop of it with a poor performer?

Daniel Briasco, manager of the Seven Hills Restaurant of the new New York Hilton at Rockefeller Center, says you can apply an intense flame, without abuse, to any food that can be sautéed, turned around, or tumbled in a chafing dish. But this expert urges caution in flaming delicate crabmeat, lobster, perch, trout, or artichoke bottoms. Sensitive to flame, these foods need only a touch of it to blend their own flavors and to take the enhancement of liqueur flavors. Any intense blazing will inflict abuse.

Italo Serra, another master of the chafing dish, reveals his treatment of fruits on the luxury liner Leonardo da Vinci. This maître d'hôtel is convinced that fruits benefit most from flaming; if handled with finesse, they will come out of the blaze with a truer flavor. He says to stir gently in foaming sweet butter and powdered sugar to avoid bruising. Flame at the last minute.

Liqueur flavors are sensitive to heat and are quick to cook away.

He urges all neophytes to experiment with flavors. Combine the high-proof liquors you need for blazing with those that don't flame too well but have rich flavor to give. Try strawberries, flamed with brandy and crème de fraises, and ladle, while still blazing, over individual servings of ice cream.

Blaze peaches with bourbon and Southern Comfort. This liqueur has a bourbon base and a sweet peach flavor that imparts mellow magic to peaches, nectarines, and apricots. Before blazing, turn up cavity side of fruit halves, and fill openings with peach marmalade.

Flambée bananas with gin. And try cherries with kirsch and Cherry Heering. Vary your flavors from time to time. Flame pears with Drambuie—if you really want to flame it. Drambuie is one of the greatest of liqueurs, and most chefs would rather drink than flame it.

Small fruits, such as berries, can be flambéed raw, if their temperature is at least 75 degrees (warm in a covered pan to heat). This way, they'll keep their plumpness and their fruit flavor is heightened.

You'll need a different technique altogether to flambée dishes of liquid or soft content that can drown out liquor or liqueur before it's flared. To avoid this, Marie Robertson Hamm, author of The Second Chafing Dish Cookbook, says to blaze your liquor before pouring it into the dish. Then pour the flames gently over the surface. Before lighting liquor, preheat in a ladle held over a candle. Flame, then pour the liquid flames over a dish with sauce (Lobster Newburg), or one custard-soft (Zabaglione), or one as liquid as soup. This technique of blazing first before pouring is also the way to flambée ice cream.

WITH her inventive technique Mrs. Hamm may have started ■ vogue for flaming hearty frozen soups. Taking only a few minutes to prepare, they make, nonetheless, elegant living-room first courses.

More fine points of flambéeing come from Rudolph Stannish, party-catering chef whose skill at blazing crêpes suzette and soufflé omelettes at fashionable private gatherings holds guests transfixed.

One point to watch, he says, is to use a sweet liqueur that burns out quickly when you blaze omelettes. The trouble with using brandy is that it burns longer, darkens eggs, and sometimes imparts an odor.

Using freshly opened liquor from small or half-size bottles is important, he says. It ignites more quickly and flames better than liquor lying around in the bottom of larger recorked bottles. You can get a wide variety of good imported and domestic brandies and liqueurs in miniature—just enough in each bottle for one flambée. If you live in a state that doesn't allow the sale of miniatures, half-bottles will help you to keep your stock fresh; so will having handy a kit of assorted new corks.

Another Stannish secret is using sugar to make almost anything he cooks flambée more richly and to keep flames flickering longer. He says sprinkling sugar over fruit gives you an entrancing mauve-colored flame and a glaze that you can't get any other way. Even non-sweet dishes benefit from adding sugar—which can't even be tasted.

THE party spirit at Christmas-time dictates the kind of dishes he flambées. One is a flaming game. It's called Snapdragon. Following an old English custom, he soaks table raisins overnight in cognac or rum to plump them out like fresh grapes. When he's ready to blaze, he transfers raisins to his heating unit, set in the center of a cleared table, and heats them covered until they steam. Then he turns lights low, ignites, and turns off heat. He invites each guest to snatch as many flaming raisins as he can without burning his fingers.

From Gus Kotsias, manager of Chicago's famous Pump Room, a name synonymous with the word "flambée," comes the secret of making the Christmas plum pudding richer and better-flavored with the second heating. (As for the flame dancing on the pudding, he says that catching a piece brings you good luck.) To reheat, steam in top of double boiler. Transfer to a hot serving tray and top with a mound of hard sauce laced with brandy. Pour preheated brandy over pudding—four ounces to a two-pound pudding—and flame. You can reheat and flame a fruit cake the same way. But to reheat a mince pie, put it in the oven, then flame it as you would the others.

Pointers on which all flambéeing experts agree: Practise on your family as many as three or four times before attempting to wow a table of dinner guests. Learn your recipe by heart, try out different liquors for strength and flavor, and test your cooking unit.

Before your small guests are due, put on a stack of gay, short, choral numbers. Christmas Hymns and Carols, Vol. II, sung by the Robert Shaw Chorale is a good choice (all records mentioned are listed at the end of the article). Some songs are familiar, many less well known. Two that will appeal especially to the youngest guests are "Mary Had a Baby," and "How Far Is It To Bethlehem?"

Christmas in France is another good party-opener. The twelve carols are sung by a children's choir. Your youngsters may join "Jingle Bells," but they will be surprised to hear it in French as "Vive le Vent." "White Christmas" is, of course, "Noel Blanc." The rest of the carols are entirely French in origin.

But Christmas spirit does not require a strict adherence to Christmas subjects. Too concentrated a dose of Christmas subject matter can deafen the ears to what the season is really about. Several records are listed that were not composed with the holiday season in mind but have the flavor, the allure, the excitement and the mystery of Christmas. You might, for example, greet guests with The Magic of the Bells. This recital of hymn tunes by the Carillon of Riverside Church, New York, is exhilarating and bold. It does not contain Christmas music, but it is full of the grandeur of bell ringing and praise.

Another such record is Hallelujah!, a collection of sacred choruses: Handel's "Hallelujah Chorus" from The Messiah, Brahms' "How Lovely Is Thy Dwelling Place," and Haydn's "The Heavens Are Telling," are included.

Since children bring new ears to music, medieval song does not sound strange to them. Its melodic purity sounds innocent to our twentieth-century ears. It endears itself to both children and adults, capturing the atmosphere of the holiday season. Hark, Ye Shepherds, is a collection of carols from the 13th Century to the present, sung by six voices. Medieval English Carols, is another collection overflowing with Christmas serenity.

Mid-Party Music

By now your party is in full swing. For a change of pace you can play some music that is in longer episodes than song, more delicate, more content to stay in the background. An 18th-Century Christmas includes Haydn's "Toy Symphony," a Corelli Christmas concerto and several Bach chorales. A particularly gentle and endearing collection of Christmas folk songs has been recorded by Alan Mills (Christmas Songs from Many Lands) and Odetta has recorded a group of Christmas spirituals. Very young children will especially like these that include "Shout for Joy," "Children, Go Where I Send Thee," and "Poor Little Jesus." Peter and the Wolf and Nutcracker Suite would please the young, too.

The Royal Brass Music of King James I, is neither quiet nor about Christmas, but the brilliant sounds, are festively in keeping with the holiday spirit. If the party is beginning to sag, quick, put it on.

Required Listening

Toward the end of the party when cookies, cakes, punch and milk are being consumed, you can sum up the wonderful event that a party is with a special record that must be listened to closely. It could be the great actress, Dame Edith Evans, telling The First Christmas. If the party is for very young children, put on Vivien Leigh telling The Tale of Mrs. Tiggy-Winkle and the Tale of Jemima Puddleduck, the Beatrix Potter stories. Or, if the children are older, choose Dylan Thomas, the Welsh poet, reading his own "A Child's Christmas in Wales."

A good album for children and adults to enjoy together—if your party is a mixture of generations—is the enchanting Chester mystery play of Noah and the Ark, set to music by Benjamin Britten. In Noye's Fludde, children sing roles and play in their own orchestra. The parade of the animals into the ark is infectious; small children will march, too. The flight of the dove is touchingly tender and the finale hymn, "The Spacious Firmament" (the traditional, recognizable hymn itself) is full of Christmas love. All can join and sing it, too. The final words of God's Voice could well be the final words of Father Christmas, "And now farewell, my darling deare."
